Report of the Ard Stiúrthóir Páraic Ó Dufaigh

“...exhilarating hurling semi-finals and two riveting and tension-filled football finals.”

Introduction

In the context of the ongoing debate on the format of the All-Ireland football championship, it is worth noting that the 2016 championships in hurling and football provided us with a salutary reminder of the value of the qualifier system. We would all probably agree that, along with Tipperary footballers' breakthrough that brought them to an All-Ireland semi-final, the greatest excitement was generated by the late-season resurgence of Waterford hurlers and Mayo footballers. Both teams had been eliminated in their respective provincial championship (with Waterford hurlers suffering a particularly heavy defeat to Tipperary). Good teams can have bad days. Both Waterford and Mayo had their bad day, and then went on, by being given a deserved second chance, to prove their true worth. I say 'deserved' because the fate of a team in our primary competition should not be decided on the outcome of one game alone. Moreover, teams train, above all, for the championship; these committed amateur players, whose greatest reward is the thrill of championship success, deserve a second chance to give of their best. This is what the qualifier system allowed Mayo and Waterford to do in 2016, and in so doing we were given two exhilarating hurling semi-finals and two riveting and tension-filled football finals.

Tipperary hurlers and Dublin footballers became All-Ireland winners in ways that left no doubt that they were worthy champions. Tipperary had fallen slightly short of their own expectations in previous years, which turned out to be the platform for their victory in 2016 – surely the prospect of a talented team again not winning must have been a tremendous motivating factor. For all that, they had but a point to spare over a battling Galway in the semi-final, and then had to overcome what every modern hurling team has to overcome to feel they are worthy champions – Kilkenny. But Tipperary did so with a powerful display of skill and determination that even the great Kilkenny could not match on the day.

Dublin has been called the greatest football team of a generation, and had given ample evidence of their qualities in defeating Donegal and Kerry in the quarter- and semi-finals. They surely did not underestimate Mayo as they approached the final, but many did. Mayo were inspirational in their self-belief, commitment and tactical astuteness, and the universal conclusion was that Dublin were fortunate to manage a draw in the first game. Equally, in a replay that was as intense, as draining and pulsating as the first game, few contested Dublin’s right to be champions, even though achieved by a single point. We have a right to look forward to a 2017 championship in which Dublin will face formidable obstacles as they seek a three-in-a-row victory.

The disappointment of Waterford hurling supporters was greatly eased by their victory in the U-21 All-Ireland championship in September; Waterford’s brilliant young team was unstoppable against Galway in the final. And Mayo supporters, too, have the great consolation of being able to look back on 2016 as the year in which their team became U-21 All-Ireland football champions. In the minor grade, Kerry achieved an outstanding third All-Ireland football title in a row, while Tipperary minor hurlers made it a great day for the county when they won their All-Ireland title on the same afternoon as the seniors won theirs.

In hurling in 2016 there were a number of notable initiatives. First, following a recommendation from the Hurling 20/20 Committee, chaired by Liam Sheedy, a National Hurling Development Manager has been appointed – Martin Fogarty from Kilkenny will have the important role of developing the game. Second, the National Hurling Development Committee originated and launched a new and successful national hurling competition, the Celtic Challenge, to replace the All-Ireland Minor B and C hurling championships. And, third, Hawk-Eye extended its area of surveillance to Semple Stadium, Thurles, thus greatly contributing to score integrity in major GAA matches.

The GAA must remain open to change where there is clear evidence of the need for change. Such was the case at Congress 2016, where important measures to address player-welfare issues were adopted. Congress agreed to regrade the inter-county minor level from U-18 to U-17 years, and to replace the U-21 football championship with an U-20 championship in which U-17 and U-18 players would be ineligible to play.

In terms of our infrastructure, a milestone for the Association was reached through the opening of our National Games Development Centre at the National Sports Campus in Abbotstown, which includes five playing pitches and other excellent and extensive facilities.

Another important initiative was the launch of the East Leinster Project, the Association’s three-year investment in coaching and games development in the Dublin commuter counties of Meath, Kildare, Louth and Wicklow, a commitment that reflects the increasing concentration of population in these counties.

On the players’ side, the Association concluded a new framework agreement with the GPA that will run for the next three years. And we must acknowledge the reasons that lie behind the establishment of the Club Players Association, namely the frustration of club players with the failure of our fixtures calendar to provide them with a coherent schedule of games throughout the year.

The GAA commemorated the 1916 Rising with the presentation of Laochra in Croke Park in April (at the conclusion of the Allianz Football League Division One and Two finals). The celebration, which was very well received, featured almost 2,000 dancers, singers, musicians, entertainers and members, and took place before an attendance of 80,000 people.

A celebratory event of a different kind was the holding in Dublin, for the first time, of the World Games. The increasing presence of the GAA internationally was evidenced in the participation of fifty-six teams from all over the world. It was a source of great pleasure for all concerned that these international GAA players were able to see Croke Park on a big-match day, as the opening ceremony took place at half-time in the All-Ireland senior hurling semi-final between Kilkenny and Waterford on August 7.

There was much satisfaction to be had, too, on account of the progress made in 2016 in the redevelopment of the GAA complex in Ruislip, London. It is hoped that the new facility will be ready by May 2017, which will represent a tremendous boost for the GAA in London. Part of the satisfaction derived from the fact that the old London GAA headquarters, in New Eltham, was finally sold in 2016. In the year ahead we need to support Lancashire County Board in its efforts to provide proper facilities so that we can develop our games in an area with a large Irish population.

And, on the subject of grounds' development, it is good to record that substantial progress is being made on the Páirc Uí Chaoimh and Casement Park redevelopments.

2016 will turn out to have been a landmark year for handball with the settlement of the long-running dispute with the Irish Handball Council Sports

Centre, and the agreement between the GAA and Dublin City Council on the reconstruction of Sackville Avenue that will lead to the building of a world-class National Handball and Community Centre. Planning permission has been submitted for the new centre, which will be managed in a partnership arrangement between the GAA and the local community and members of the Handball Centre.

Congress 2016

Congress 2016, held in Tullow, Co. Carlow, debated a total of sixty-five motions and presented a wide range of issues for decision. It was a noteworthy event in that it took a number of important steps to address player-welfare issues as they related to talented players in the 17-21 age group: these players were being asked to train too much, to play too many matches for too many teams, and were being afforded inadequate time for rest and recovery, leading to significant physical and psychological strains. The proposals before Congress 2016 sought to significantly ease the burden on young elite players by providing them with a more measured career progression of playing and training and by taking greater account of their age and development.

Other motions sought to develop a revised calendar of fixtures in which a better balance could be established between inter-county and club fixtures. Motions specifically proposed that:

- (i) at inter-county level only, the minor (i.e. U-18) hurling and football competitions should be regraded as minor U-17;
- (ii) the U-21 football championship should be replaced by an U-20 championship in which U-17 and U-18 players would be ineligible to play;

- (iii) the All-Ireland senior football and hurling finals should be brought forward by playing the All-Ireland hurling final on the second last Sunday in August and the All-Ireland football final on the first Sunday in September;
- (iv) replays in most games in the provincial and All-Ireland senior championships should take place only after extra time had been played;
- (v) the All-Ireland junior football and intermediate hurling championships should be discontinued.

The decisions that passed into rule the first two motions will ease the pressure on students in second- and third-level education. However, it was disappointing that the motions addressing the imbalance between inter-county and club fixtures were defeated. The decision to stick with replays was largely influenced by financial arguments, and it is difficult to identify the promotional or developmental value that justifies the retention of the junior and intermediate inter-county competitions. Most frustrating of all was the rejection of the motion seeking to bring forward the dates of the All-Ireland senior football and hurling finals. It was a very modest proposal that would have allowed counties a little more time to complete their club championships. Its rejection sent a negative message to club players about their status within an undesirable hierarchy of GAA players. It is all the more frustrating in that all of these motions received a significant majority of the votes at Congress, even though they did not reach the required threshold of a two-thirds majority.

Ironically, the biggest discussion point over the weekend was generated by a motion that was withdrawn without going before Congress for decision. Motion 2 sought to reorganise the All-Ireland senior football championship. The changes in format were quite limited, apart from the creation of an All-Ireland Senior B championship comprising the teams that make up

Division 4 of the Allianz football league. Under the proposal, these teams would no longer participate in the All-Ireland qualifiers; however, the team that won the All-Ireland B championship would be eligible to participate in the following year's qualifier series. It was a Central Council-sponsored motion based on the belief that the prospect of Division Four counties making it to at least the quarter-final stage of the All-Ireland championship was fairly remote. The Central Council view that the chance of success in a secondary competition would be more inviting than annual failure in the qualifiers wasn't one shared by the affected players and their counties. It became clear in the lead-up to Congress that there was little likelihood of the motion being passed. When the counties in question made it clear that they would be voting against Motion 2, Central Council took the inevitable step and withdrew it.

Motion 2 was the final stage in a consultation process, initiated by An Coiste Bainistíochta, which ultimately failed to produce a consensus on a new structure for the All-Ireland senior football championship. A very democratic attempt to engage with counties in developing a new format had produced eighteen fully developed proposals; none of them, however, ever looked likely to be the basis for agreement. It has been argued that the failed attempt to reach such a consensus proved damaging to the Association, on the grounds that it drew much negative commentary in the media. But the simple truth of the matter was that there happened to be a broad range of views on the issue, all sincerely held. Notably, there was clearly little appetite to propose or support any structure that involved the end of the provincial championships. The potential to create a new championship structure while retaining the provincial championships was very limited, so we should hardly be surprised that a structure that was deemed better than the current one did not emerge. The preference of less successful counties to stay within the present qualifier system rather than play in a stand-alone championship should be respected; equally, it has to be acknowledged that this preference limits the options for change.

Football Championship

As Congress 2016 did not resolve the issue of the structure of the All-Ireland senior football championship, I prepared a discussion paper for An Coiste Bainistíochta and, with its approval, then circulated its report with the aim of encouraging Congress 2017 to address some of the deficiencies in the championship structure, while recognising the need to meet the demand from our club players for a fairer schedule of games.

The background to the proposal that will go before Congress, outlined in these documents, is well known at this stage. The current structure of provincial championships and All-Ireland qualifiers, in operation since 2001, has obvious drawbacks, most obviously an unhealthy predictability about the outcome in two of the provincial championships: Dublin has won eleven of the last twelve Leinster titles, while either Kerry or Cork has won every Munster senior championship in the past 80 years with the exception of Clare's win in 1992. The qualifier system, too, seems to have lost some of its appeal, with a decline in attendances that shows little signs of being reversed. Too often it is said that our football championship does not really begin until August.

The debate on the An Coiste Bainistíochta initiative of 2015 on the structure of the championship, while unsuccessful in terms of initiating change, did, at least, allow a number of conclusions to be reached. These – along with the imperative to support our clubs – translate into the following constraints within which any reform of the championship structure must be considered:

- (i) the needs of clubs must be taken into account;
- (ii) there is a lack of consensus on how the present championship model might be improved;
- (iii) counties want the provincial championships to be retained;
- (iv) counties demand a second-chance game;
- (v) the so-called less successful counties have no interest in taking part in a second-tier competition.

The proposal that is going before this Congress recognises these constraints and presents a modest adjustment to the championship format that would produce a more exciting football championship within the current provincial championship structure, and in a way that can have a positive effect on the playing of county club championships. The details of the actual proposal on the championship format are well known and don't require extensive repetition here. However, it is worth underlining some of its important advantages:

- It would provide a valuable enhancement of the championship by way of eight additional competitive matches contested by the country's eight best teams. The twelve group games (which would replace the current quarter-finals) would increase interest at the peak of the GAA season and provide a much wider opportunity for the country's best teams to display their skills and the qualities of Gaelic football in summer playing conditions.
- It would provide a more exacting pathway to the All-Ireland final: the finalists will have had to compete with three of the best teams in the country at the group stage, followed by a semi-final with a top-four team that came through the same test. This will have the effect of ensuring that the finalists will have been equally tested and that the two best teams in the country contest the All-Ireland final.

- Playing the All-Ireland semi-finals over one weekend will generate great excitement and give both finalists the same preparation time for the final.
- It would retain the provincial championships in their present form and confirm their importance in the context of the All-Ireland championship.
- It would also allow the provincial champions to lose one game yet still retain the possibility of going on to win the All-Ireland, thus eliminating an obvious injustice in the current structure: at present, provincial champions are the only counties that, once defeated, are denied that second-chance opportunity.
- It should increase commercial and broadcast income from the All-Ireland senior football championship. A significant proportion of this increase would be ring-fenced for development of our games in less successful counties.
- It guarantees eight additional major games at venues within the provinces, which is particularly important in the context of the Association's investment in stadiums other than Croke Park. It would also bring top teams to provincial venues that they would never otherwise visit in the championship.
- The traditionally less strong counties would be favoured by being granted home-venue advantage in rounds one, two and three of the qualifiers. This would represent a significant benefit and encouragement to these counties and would provide them with attractive home fixtures.
- A condensed inter-county season will create a more balanced ratio of inter-county training sessions to matches (i.e. fewer training sessions per match), and will also reduce the overall annual training costs incurred by counties in the preparation of inter-county teams.
- It will allow club championships to be played off, to a greater extent than at present, in summer conditions and over an extended period of time.

- It will allow counties to give greater certainty to club players as to when club championship games will be played and when holidays might be planned.

Because of earlier completion dates for the All-Ireland championships, counties will be able to promote the closing stages of their club championships without competition from the live televising of major inter-county games.

There are a couple of additional points that should be borne in mind in relation to this proposal. The argument that the proposed new format makes it more difficult for 'weaker' counties to reach the last eight is simply wrong. The pathway to that stage is unchanged, except in the wholly positive sense that these counties would be favoured by their being granted home-venue advantage in rounds one, two and three of the qualifiers. It is worth reflecting on a statistic that was provided at the meeting of Ard Chomhairle that considered the proposal: since the All-Ireland qualifiers were introduced, twenty-three different counties have qualified for the last eight of the All-Ireland football championship. There is no ceiling on what any county can achieve.

It is also important to make clear that the proposal does not seek to eliminate replays. There will still be replays, but just not as many as at present. The proposal simply provides for extra time before games go to a replay. Fewer replays will allow club championships to proceed as scheduled. The argument that replays have a promotional value is true in some instances only, while the negative effect of the scheduling of replays and subsequent cancellation of club championship games is to leave club players with the conviction that they are not valued by the Association.

The proposals to both restructure and condense the football championship are interlinked. We can add the proposed eight matches to the current quarter-final stage only if we condense the period within which the championship is played.

If we leave the football championship unchanged, we are effectively burying our heads in the sand: the problem of falling appeal will remain, with no obvious alternative that is likely to achieve a consensus, while the unfairness to club players will again have been ignored. The task of Congress is to decide what is best for the GAA, but it must do so in the clear understanding that the Association needs an exciting football championship.

Hurling

Concern has been expressed that acceptance of the proposed reform of the football championship could have a negative impact on the game of hurling. Two specific concerns have been expressed: (i) that the addition of eight competitive matches contested by the country's best football teams will overshadow the hurling championship; and (ii), that bringing forward the major hurling championship games will diminish the relative importance of hurling.

It is very important to emphasise the point that the aim of the Alternative Fixtures Schedule (prepared as an Appendix to the football championship proposal) was simply to demonstrate, for purposes of illustration, one way in which the All-Ireland senior championships can be completed by the end of August so as to achieve a more condensed inter-county programme. The motion on the timing of the All-Ireland finals that will go before Congress will ask that both All-Ireland senior finals be played on or before the last Sunday in August, on dates determined by Central Council. It does not specify a particular Sunday, nor the order in which the finals would be played. There is absolutely no reason, therefore, why Central Council could not decide to play the hurling final after the football final if it was concerned that there would be too few major hurling games in July or August.

“Since the All-Ireland qualifiers were introduced, twenty three different counties have qualified for the last eight of the All-Ireland football championship.”

I would be very concerned if I believed that the football proposal might damage the jewels in the crown that are the provincial and All-Ireland hurling championships. But I honestly do not believe that the concern is justified. It is hard to think of a reason why bringing forward the hurling – and football – championships should diminish interest in the hurling championship. Major hurling games attract huge public interest irrespective of clashes with important football games (or other sporting events) taking place at the same time. As opposed to concerns expressed, we should consider the tangible benefits on offer to hurling through the condensing of the championships – county and provincial club hurling championships will be played off on firmer pitches and in better weather conditions. Too often in recent years provinces have had to complete their hurling championships in conditions that were detrimental to the display of hurling skills.

This year's Congress will also consider a motion from Galway that seeks to include the county in the provincial hurling championships in all grades. I fully agree that the current situation is unfair to Galway and, even more so, to Ulster teams (usually Antrim) who suffer from going directly into All-Ireland championships at the quarter- or semi-final stage. It is an issue that must be addressed. It may be that Congress will pass the motion and meet Galway's concerns, but, in the aftermath of Congress, Management Committee and Central Council must address the needs both of Ulster and, if necessary, Galway.

The Black Card

Writing about the black card has become tiresome at this stage, but, given the amount of media commentary it continues to generate, I feel bound to address the issue here. In my reports to Congress in each of the past two years I have emphasised the positive influence of the black card on how Gaelic football is played, while recognising that there was some inconsistency in the application of the rule by referees, and that work remains to be done in communicating the precise nature of black card offences to spectators and commentators. Once again, I accept that there is still work to be done in each of these areas, but instances of players being dragged to the ground are now rare, while the deliberate body-collide, an ugly, cynical and destructive foul that marred the game, has virtually been eradicated.

There are statistics, too, that underline the positive impact of the black card on the game and that provide a comparison with the pre-black card era. Since its introduction in 2014, the total aggregate scores per game – compared with the previous four years – has risen by 10%, the number of goals per game by 25% and the number of points per game by 7.5%. In the same positive vein, the average number of frees awarded per game has fallen by almost 13%. It is frustrating that there has been an inconsistency in the implementation of the rule and also a lack of understanding in some of the commentary of what the rule says (not that clear written explanation of the rule is not readily available to anyone who wishes to comment on it). The wording of the rule could hardly be clearer. The black card makes it an infraction to:

- deliberately pull down an opponent;
- deliberately trip an opponent with hand(s), arm, leg or foot;
- deliberately collide with an opponent after he has played the ball away or for the purpose of taking him out of the movement of play;
- remonstrate in an aggressive manner with a Match Official.

No one could argue that these infractions do not disfigure the game. Have we all forgotten just how nasty and objectionable these offences were? The onus is on players not to commit the offences, on referees to focus on the deliberate nature of the foul and on commentators to understand clearly the nature of the fouls that earn the black card penalty. The reality is that it is unlikely that the rule will be reviewed before the next playing-rule-change year in 2020. It is incumbent upon players, referees and commentators to accept this, and to seek consistent application of a rule that can make Gaelic football better for both players and spectators.

The Christy Ring Cup Final

One of the most unfortunate events of 2016 was the error in scorekeeping that led to Meath being presented with the Christy Ring Cup after their final game with Antrim had actually ended in a draw. A number of errors occurred that day, resulting in several changes being made on the Croke Park scoreboard during the game. A replay was ordered and took place, which Meath won. Arising from the errors in the first match, a number of changes in practice have been introduced. While referees have previously been told that one umpire at each end should also record the scores, it was agreed, in the aftermath of the first Meath-Antrim match, that the green-flag umpire will record the score at each end, and that, in the event that only one umpire is wired for the Referee Communication system, it should be the green-flag umpire who is wired. In the case of games in Croke Park, the Games Administration staff member on duty now also records the score, and any change or decision in relation to the scoreboard can only be made on the instructions of the referee via the staff member on duty.

Video Review of Decisions

The power of television in setting the agenda for the debate on our games was evident once again after the controversial award of a penalty in the Mayo v Fermanagh All-Ireland football qualifier game in July. Arising from this penalty award, it was argued that the referee should be able to avail of video evidence before confirming his decision in any of the following circumstances: (i) where the referee is unsure about whether or not to award a penalty; (ii) where TV pictures indicate that the referee may be in error in awarding a penalty; (iii) where the referee is unsure whether to give a black, yellow or red card. The Mayo v Fermanagh penalty award led to an outbreak of commentary advocating the introduction of a system similar to the Television Match Official (TMO) in rugby, the logic of which is, one imagines, to ensure that every decision made by a referee must be correct beyond doubt. It is a principle that has already been adopted in a number of professional sports.

There are a number of difficulties with this manner of reviewing referees' decisions. Primary among them is that it disrupts the flow of the game. In sports such as hurling, Gaelic football, Australian Rules and soccer, the games are more attractive when played quickly. That may be the reason why the latter two sports have relied on technology to ensure the integrity of the score, but have stayed away from the more invasive impact of video replays. If both teams were to be allowed to challenge even two decisions per game, four additional and fairly lengthy stoppages would occur in a match. And that doesn't take account of the occasions when a referee will decide to take the safe option and ask for a video review. This would be a natural reaction for a referee who knows that, if he makes a major decision without using an available 'second opinion', he will be criticised afterwards. Professional sports such as rugby, basketball, baseball and American football have all adopted the video-review model, yet it is hugely frustrating for the spectator or viewer to wait through the time taken to reach a decision. It should also be noted that the use of video review in professional sport has been expanded far beyond its original remit. And we can be sure that this would happen in our games, too, if we were to go down the road of reviewing difficult decisions in games. It was interesting to read the recent comments of top rugby referee Nigel Owens, who wants to see fewer decisions referred to the TMO. He expressed the view that rugby should go back to where it was five or six years ago, where it was used only on the goal line. He believes that overuse of the TMO is eroding the authority of the referee and that the focus should be on improving the decision-making of match officials.

We need to remind ourselves that when we play sport, it will be played and officiated by human beings whose inescapable condition it is to occasionally make mistakes. That is what we sign up for, and it shouldn't be beyond us to accept that, now and again, we will be the victims of human error. Ours are not professional sports. The challenge for us is to improve the standard of officiating of referees and umpires so that mistakes will be minimised and to encourage a spirit of sportsmanship that will allow us to accept that from time to time mistakes will be made.

Provincial and All-Ireland Club Championships

There is no doubt that the decision to organise official provincial and All-Ireland club championships was one of the best ever made by the GAA. The competitions have grown in stature each year and arouse an extraordinary level of passion and support within our clubs. This has been helped in no small way by the creative way that AIB promote these championships. Yet I continue to believe that the potential of the club championships is still relatively untapped, and that there is a great opportunity to broaden spectator support for the club game at all levels. A decision at this Congress to play the senior inter-county championships in a more condensed period would open new opportunities to promote the club championships at county, provincial and All-Ireland levels.

There is one issue, however, that poses a threat to that bright future, namely the inconsistency in the grading of teams within counties. Everyone accepts that the best team in each county, by virtue of being the county senior championship winners, represents the county in the senior provincial club championship. At intermediate and junior levels, however, there is a wide disparity in the determination of what constitutes an intermediate or junior club. The number of senior clubs in counties can vary from ten (or lower) to thirty (or higher). Where there are ten senior teams in a county, the intermediate winners, or the eleventh-ranked club, will represent the county in the provincial intermediate championship. But where there are thirty senior teams, the intermediate winners representing the county in the provincial intermediate competition will be the thirty-first ranked club. Clearly, that gap will similarly be reflected in the junior provincial championship. It is, therefore, more likely that a county will be successful in the intermediate and junior grades if it has a small number of senior teams. Obviously, each county devises a club-grading system that best suits both its internal needs and the wishes of its clubs; in some counties that grading system will be more complex than just senior, intermediate and junior. The problem is that the inconsistency in practice leads to great inequalities at provincial level; my concern is that, in the long term, this will diminish the appeal of the intermediate and junior competitions. I know that the provincial secretaries are also concerned about this issue and have agreed to investigate ways of addressing the current imbalances. Finding a solution that will meet the needs of all counties will not be easy, but that must not prevent us from trying to do so.

Interprovincial Championships

The interprovincial championships, which had been cancelled in 2015 because of adverse weather, were restored to the fixtures calendar in 2016. The six games drew a combined attendance of less than 1,000 paying spectators. Surely we have a responsibility to ask ourselves why we persist in playing these competitions: they are neither developmental nor promotional. Many of our top players declare themselves unavailable and few spectators turn up. I cannot imagine what circumstances we think will change that would make a difference to any of these realities. This leads to an inevitable conclusion: the competitions have no viable future. I understand the sentiment and nostalgia attached to the inter-provincials but that is hardly sufficient reason to persist with competitions in which there is little interest.

International Rules

The International Rules will return to Australia this November for a two-test series; there will also be a series in Ireland in 2019. And while the future of the series beyond that date is not guaranteed, I am hopeful that it can continue on a biennial basis into the foreseeable future. As for the longer-term, the criteria remain as they have always been: the commitment of players from both countries to play, the ongoing engagement of the public and the continued capacity of the series to produce quality football, free from unnecessary negative physicality.

Club Players Association

The Club Players Association (CPA) has its origins in the frustration of club players with the failure of our fixtures calendar to provide them with a coherent schedule of games throughout the year. The very fact that club players feel there is a need for such an organisation simply reinforces what we already know – that we must find ways to support club players by creating more space for the playing of club games and by rebalancing our priorities in a way that our attentions are devoted more to our clubs and less to inter-county activities. There are those who believe that players should work within existing structures and, in particular, within their own clubs if they wish to bring pressure for change in this area. That argument is completely valid, but we should be concerned that a cohort of players considers it necessary to establish an organisation in order to bring about change.

“...find ways to support club players by creating more space for the playing of club games...”

At national level we have an opportunity to address some of the club players' concerns at this Congress. But not all of the issues can be resolved through Croke Park. There are significant disparities from county to county in the standard of fixture analysis and scheduling. There needs to be a greater determination within counties to address players' issues on fixtures and to ensure that inter-county players play more often with their clubs; and there must also be a much greater sharing of good-practice information between counties. Some clubs, too, need to look at their own record in this regard. Too often, fixture-making bodies are pressurised to postpone club games on very spurious grounds. In any event we, as administrators, have the opportunity to address many of the concerns that led to the formation of a CPA. We must not ignore the current frustrations of club players; their legitimate demand for a fairly scheduled club fixtures programme must also be ours.

“...developing and implementing multi-faceted communication and education plans for players, medical personnel and administrators.”

Player Welfare

Anti-Doping Education

As part of the judgement delivered on the adverse analytical finding against one of our players in 2015, the GAA was urged to increase its efforts to educate players about its anti-doping policy. Significant progress has been made in this respect in 2016, although it is clear that we still have some distance to travel. In conjunction with Sport Ireland and the GPA, we have taken a methodical approach to developing and implementing multi-faceted communication and education plans for players, medical personnel and administrators. Among the key points that need to be communicated are:

- (i) the principle of strict liability (i.e. that a player is solely responsible for any prohibited substance found in his system, whether there was an intention to cheat or not);
- (ii) the awareness that medications used in everyday life may contain prohibited substances;
- (iii) the dangers associated with taking food supplements;
- (iv) a basic understanding of anti-doping rules violations;
- (v) information on the substances on the prohibited lists;
- (vi) players' rights and responsibilities.

It is also vital that players, county officers and backroom-team personnel are aware of the availability of resources with respect to anti-doping education. We have used a variety of media to communicate these messages: presentations to inter-county panels; provincial workshops for player representatives, team management and backroom teams; and the use of SMS messages, emails and social media. Information on anti-doping is also included as part of the annual application process for the 'Government Eligible Expenses Scheme'.

We have also developed a new e-learning course which will be rolled out in 2017; in addition, the number of anti-doping tutors trained by the Association has risen to fifteen. All counties should now have a designated anti-doping education contact in their senior inter-county management team, and every county is required to have procedures in place for updating Team Whereabouts and educating players who join the panel during the season.

The GAA's Medical, Scientific and Welfare Committee oversees a lot of this work, while it is managed on a day-to-day basis by Player Welfare Administrator, Gearóid Devitt, who deserves great credit for overhauling our approach to education in this area.

Player Welfare Mentors

One less heralded initiative that could have significant long-term benefits for the Association is the appointment of Player Welfare Mentors, whose function is to provide support and mentoring to young players involved with county squads. The initiative is intended to be a practical and useful support to talented young players who may find themselves facing the effects of overtraining or burnout as a result of trying to manage the demands of fulfilling club, county, school or college training and playing commitments on top of the normal demands of their daily lives. An initial pilot run in 2015 proved an important learning experience, and it was subsequently agreed that managing the initiative on a provincial basis would be the best way forward. It was also agreed to extend the project to include our Higher Education Games Development Officers and to use the higher education sector to further trial the training and materials that will be used in the national programme. This was initiated in Autumn 2016; the plan is that mentors will be identified and trained in all counties by the end of 2017 with a view to beginning their work on the ground in 2018.

Concussion

While not the issue it may be in some sports, the Association nonetheless has always been to the forefront in efforts to deal with the issue of concussion. Our long-standing policy has been articulated in the maxim, ‘if in doubt, sit them out’. However, as medical knowledge and thinking on concussion advances, it is incumbent on us to continually evaluate our position to ensure that the welfare of our players remains primary.

To that end, we were pleased to join up with the Bon Secours Health System and the University of Pittsburgh Medical Centre (UPMC) – a world leader in concussion research – in hosting a major concussion symposium in Croke Park last October.

Leading concussion experts and sporting figures from the GAA joined together in sharing the developing knowledge of best practice, protocols and treatment of concussion. The issue of Head Injury Assessment (HIA) and the suitability of the introduction of sideline assessment for our games was a significant talking point on the day. We are awaiting the observations of the consensus conference on Concussion in Sport (held recently in Berlin) before completing an evaluation of our current provisions. The policy that we ultimately adopt must apply at all levels of the Association and must ensure that the welfare of our players remains the chief consideration.

We are also currently exploring potential training and education strategies with UPMC on the concussion issue, which could ultimately be of great long-term benefit to the Association.

Gaelic Players Association

The updated protocol with the Gaelic Players Association that was approved by Central Council in November of last year was the culmination of months of work. It involved establishing both a broad framework within which a final agreement could be established, and the development of the practical provisions that will govern the relationship for the next three years. An important element in developing a greater shared understanding of the issues facing both our players and administrators involved in the day-to-day running of their counties was the involvement in the negotiations of, for the GAA, members drawn from the volunteer body, and, for the GPA, a number of inter-county players.

The agreement builds on the principles enshrined in the GAA/GPA Recognition Protocol of 2011. It again recognises the contribution of inter-county players to the commercial success of the GAA and reinforces the commitment of both bodies to the maintenance and protection of our amateur ethos.

From the players’ perspective, it was clear from the meetings that there were four areas of concern to them:

- (i) the desire of inter-county players to have greater input into policy decisions that affect them;
- (ii) the increasing demands and sacrifices associated with being an inter-county player;
- (iii) the level and process of reimbursement of player expenses;
- (iv) the desire to enhance the level of services available to inter-county players through the GPA.

The first of these concerns was dealt with by adding player representation to relevant central committees and by using the existing Joint Review Committee (which includes the Uachtarán and Ard Stiúrthóir) as a forum for the discussion of policy issues of importance to our players. In addition, a motion to Congress seeks approval for a GPA delegate to Annual Congress and the right to submit one motion to that body each year.

In terms of the demands on inter-county players and the way in which the development of our games affects them, we understood and shared the GPA’s frustration. To that end, we have jointly engaged with the Economic and Social Research Institute (ESRI) in commissioning a major research study to examine: (i) the commitment demanded of players on account of their participation in inter-county hurling and football panels; (ii) the impact that playing at this level has on players’ personal and professional lives, both positive and negative; and (iii) its impact on their involvement with their clubs. The onus will be on the Working Party of GAA/GPA, established under the terms of the November protocol, to determine the actions needed to reduce the level of commitment required and to ensure that inter-county and club games coexist harmoniously.

This is a first step towards eventually bringing proposals to Central Council with the aim of helping our players maintain a better balance between playing at both club and inter-county levels and between their personal and professional lives.

At November’s Central Council meeting, a new Charter and Guidelines for inter-county players was approved. This outlined more detailed processes relating to expenses claims, as well as recommendations on the minimum levels of training, and the leisure gear and tickets, etc., that should be provided to players. An increased mileage rate and the introduction of a nutrition-expense allowance are also included, with Central Council providing assistance for counties to meet the increased costs. A sum of €200,000 will also be set aside annually within our own Benevolent Fund to deal with instances where surgical intervention is required by former players arising from their involvement with senior inter-county teams.

Finally, in terms of the provision of services to players through the GPA, the updated protocol provides for a new funding model that will see €2.5m per annum (or 15% of net Central Council commercial income derived from media and sponsorship, whichever is higher in a given year) allocated to the GPA for the provision of welfare and development services to our players. This funding is subject to even greater oversight than had previously been the case. Among the provisions in this respect are that:

- the GPA will present an outline budget to Central Council annually;
- it will also present an end-of-year report to Central Council outlining on a programme-by-programme basis how funding was disbursed for the year in question;
- the GAA will have a representative on the GPA's Finance Committee;
- the administration and operational costs associated with the provision of welfare/development services will not exceed 25% of the total funding provided by the GAA.

The provisions for the GPA to present at Central Council are important as they will increase the understanding by our broader membership of what the GPA does for our playing body and the ways in which it seeks to address issues of concerns for inter-county players.

Two key personnel in the development of the GPA retired in 2016: Dónal Óg Cusack stepped down from his long-held role as Chairman, while later in the year Dessie Farrell announced his decision to retire from the position of CEO. I enjoyed a good working relationship with both Dónal Óg and Dessie. We often disagreed, but I always found both to be extremely courteous; they were also very capable and firm in their desire to ensure that inter-county players are treated fairly within the GAA family. I wish them both well in their future endeavours.

GAA and the National Sports Campus

Our National Games Development Centre (NGDC) at the National Sports Campus at Abbotstown was officially opened in April. €12m was invested in the twenty-five-acre facility, situated adjacent to the National Aquatic Centre and close to the main entrance of the campus.

The GAA property includes a total of five playing pitches – four of them full size and all of them floodlit – a 3G pitch, a hurling wall and a pavilion housing ten dressing-rooms, a reception area and gymnasium, and associated facilities for physiotherapy, referees, meeting rooms and dining facilities. A covered, seated spectator area adjoining the pavilion can cater for 400 people.

The NGDC aims to increase participation in our games and to improve the performance/functioning of GAA participants and members (be they players, coaches, administrators, personnel, etc.) for the benefit of both the Association and the individuals themselves. Its primary focus is the provision of Games Development activities, but the centre will also be used to contribute in areas such as child protection, health and wellbeing, and officer development. It caters for units from club to county both at home and in the international GAA family, and from second-level schools to third-level activities. It is also used by the Ladies Gaelic Football and Camogie Associations. I am happy to report that there has been an excellent take-up of slots by all of the aforementioned units during the first nine months of the NGDC's operation. And it is fair to say that all have been impressed by the quality of the facility, and that there has been a positive response from players.

GAA members who have visited Abbotstown are pleased that the facilities reflect the GAA's status as a major national sporting body. That said, there has been criticism from some in relation to our participation on the National Sports Campus on the basis that it provides a state-of-the-art facility for Dublin teams rather than for the entirety of our units.

There are a few points that need to be made in this regard. We must remind ourselves that it was a government decision, not a GAA one, that determined the location of the National Sports Campus. It would, in my opinion, have been unthinkable for the GAA to have opted out and refused to accept the twenty-five-acre site offered free of charge. Irrespective of the location selected by government, the GAA was surely obliged to join other major National Governing Bodies (NGBs) on the campus. The campus accommodates the administrative headquarters of nineteen NGBs, and offers the excellent facilities of the Irish Institute of Sport and the recently completed National Indoor Arena. What message would the GAA have sent to the rest of Irish sport by opting out? And how could we have justified turning down the offer of a prime twenty-five-acre site and the opportunity to develop facilities in one of the most heavily populated urban areas in the country?

The reservations most often raised included the question of whether any county outside of Dublin would be in a position financially or practically to use the facility for anything but an occasional or once-off basis and that it would give Dublin a further competitive advantage by providing a modern training facility for Dublin GAA for the foreseeable future. Dublin has been very successful in recent years, as might be expected from a county with over 25% of the country's population. There is an increasing level of participation in Gaelic games in the city and county and a growth in the number of juvenile teams in virtually every club, factors that have combined to place a huge pressure on facilities in Dublin. If the facilities at Abbotstown served only to relieve that pressure and to provide excellent facilities for the playing of our games, it should be considered a very positive development. But the experience to date has been that the resource has been widely used by other counties in the province of Leinster, which is exactly as it should be, and that, as a training facility for Dublin county teams, use of the campus has been limited.

Leinster Council has done excellent work in using the facility to stage new Games Development events, while Connacht Council has demonstrated how it can benefit all counties by organising training opportunities for Dublin-based Connacht players. Abbotstown is at the centre of one of the most heavily populated urban areas in the country, is extremely accessible by road for the vast population that lives within fifty miles of the campus, and is ideally placed to perform its role as a National Games Development Centre.

Sanctions

There is a view among members on both sides of the Atlantic that it is time to examine Rule 6.12, which deals with playing in the USA, and to consider whether the current rule serves to advance the objectives of the Association. Under our rules, a player can apply for a sanction to play in New York or in the USGAA (formerly North American County Board) area up until 20 July, or apply for a weekend authorisation to play in New York at any stage.

There is an important distinction to be made here. Many of our players who travel to the USA are students; such travel has long been part of the student experience. It has also long been accepted that these students should be given the opportunity to assist American clubs during their summer in the USA. It appears that a small number of students are receiving inducements to play with certain clubs, but it would be unfair to students in general to impose a ban on all short-term playing in America. I welcome the submission of motions from USGAA to this Congress that seek to bring the closing date for obtaining a sanction for players intending to play in the USGAA area back to July 1, and to prohibit inter-county players from obtaining a sanction as long as their county is involved in the provincial or All-Ireland championships. We need to try to end the practice of money being offered to attract top inter-county players to the USA, including New York, who become available following their county's elimination from the championship. It leaves their home clubs without their services, displaces American-born players and utterly ignores our rules on amateurism. The actions of a handful of clubs with wealthy benefactors who pay these players to play shows a contempt for the GAA and its values. The growth of our games in the USA in recent years has been driven by hard work and good coaching programmes for juvenile players. Investment in these programmes will do far more to secure the future of our games in the New York and the USGAA areas than paying a small group of elite players to play a handful of games. There will be those who will argue that the presence of these players is a boost to supporters abroad, but, if this is so, it is at the expense of their clubs in Ireland, American-born players and of our rules on amateur status.

Media Rights

Throughout the second half of 2016, in anticipation of the negotiations for the allocation of new broadcast rights to begin later in the year, we formulated the Association's objectives for this process. There were two key objectives. First, we needed to ensure that our games would continue to be widely available on TV and radio to our domestic Irish audience and to our units abroad. Our home base of members and supporters, attached to their clubs and counties, constitute our single most important audience, while our commitment to our members abroad is unwavering. Second, we needed to protect the vital part of our revenue generated by income from broadcast rights. The GAA can only achieve its goals and fulfil its mission if it retains the capacity to fund the work of its clubs and units at home and abroad. We believe that we have achieved our goals in both respects through a five-year deal that provides stability and that places a significant value on our broadcast rights. The five-year duration of the deal

7 August 2016; Fourteen year old Trevor O'Grady, from Waterford City, reacts to a score for his side during the GAA Hurling All-Ireland Senior Championship Semi-Final match between Kilkenny and Waterford at Croke Park in Dublin.

(which is becoming the norm in sports-rights distribution globally and is two years longer than our previous deals) allows both the GAA and our broadcast partners to make longer-term investments. From a financial perspective, the new deal secures what we believe to be a fairer estimation of the value of our rights and will boost the Association's investment in games and infrastructural development.

The main elements of the agreements reached with our broadcast partners are similar to the agreement that has operated over the past three years. In relation to the senior championships, the same number of championship games will be made available for TV broadcast for the 2017-2021 period, with RTÉ broadcasting the same number of games each year as under the previous contract – 31 in total. These include the six major provincial finals, four All-Ireland quarter-finals, all four All-Ireland semi-finals and the finals in hurling and football. Sky Sports will exclusively broadcast fourteen games in total, eight of which will be All-Ireland qualifier games. Sky, in a simulcast arrangement with RTÉ, will also broadcast live the All-Ireland football and hurling semi-finals and the All-Ireland finals.

In terms of other competitions, TG4 will continue their long-standing and extensive coverage of our games, broadcasting over eighty matches each year, while eir sport will broadcast Saturday night league games. GAAGO, a joint venture of GAA and RTÉ Digital, will again provide access to televised games to Irish people in virtually every country via the internet, a hugely significant facility for Irish people abroad. One major change of note in radio rights is that RTÉ now has exclusive coverage to all radio broadcasts of our senior championships. Finally, in a positive departure from previous rights cycles, the GAA has retained access to its own near-live match-clip rights as part of a wider 2017 digital strategy. These assets will form the cornerstone of short-form content programming across GAA.ie and official social media channels, and will address the growing demand for such offerings among younger members.

While on the subject of media, I want to extend my thanks to the journalists who cover our games through the various print and broadcast media. Despite all the changes taking place in the manner of people's access to information on the GAA and its games, the journalists who write in local and national newspapers or broadcast on radio remain primary sources of information and commentary for those with an interest in Gaelic games. A labour of love it may be, but we appreciate their work.

Gambling and Sport

Few off-field sports topics have received more media attention in 2016 than gambling. In January 2014 the GAA and GPA launched joint gambling guidelines for all GAA members and units (available to download at www.gaa.ie/community). The aim was twofold: to protect our members by creating awareness of the risks of problem gambling and to protect the integrity of our games.

A submission by the Community and Health department on behalf of the GAA in relation to the Gambling Control Bill (currently before Government) received considerable media attention in early 2016. This submission requested the inclusion of a clause in the bill outlawing betting on any sporting event designed for juveniles (those under 18 years). In response to the submission, this practice has been largely discontinued by all main bookmakers in the Irish market. All the evidence suggests that young people are the most vulnerable when it comes to gambling, especially in this mobile communications age of easy and immediate access to gambling opportunities. (The submission was also made to the relevant body attached to the Assembly in the Six Counties.) GAA Community and Health manager, Colin Regan, was subsequently invited by Independent Senator Gerard Craughwell to address an Oireachtas briefing session on the GAA's position on gambling in Leinster House in October.

The feedback from two gambling-awareness workshops at the 2016 National Health and Wellbeing Conference has also prompted the organisation of a similar workshop at Congress 2017, while a motion before this Congress is designed to further protect our members and the integrity of our games.

Impact of Rural Decline

Ireland is becoming a largely urban society. Population figures from recent censuses confirm this, and there is plenty of evidence from across the EU to indicate that this is part of a continent-wide trend. In Ireland we are witnessing a pattern of declining rural population, which is being accompanied by a gradual diminution of services in rural areas: we have seen the closure of rural Garda Stations, post offices and banks, a reduction in transport links and a growing threat to GP services; broadband roll-out has been much slower than is needed to sustain a rural economy; and there has been a decline in employment in all rural towns, at the same time as larger urban centres and cities have continued to grow.

Anyone who travels around Ireland observes these signs of rural decline. In every small town there are numerous boarded-up shops where once there were thriving businesses. The perception of many rural organisations is that, while money is being spent on infrastructural investment and job-creation in the cities, little is being done to create employment or to invest in the social and economic life in rural Ireland. Young people move to the larger population centres for a third-level education and very often have to stay there to pursue employment opportunities; if that fails, they emigrate. The consequences for the GAA are serious and are already having a very negative impact on rural clubs all over the country, but particularly on clubs in counties along the west coast. For many clubs it has meant a reduction in the number of teams competing in county competition; for others, it has been a struggle simply to remain in existence.

This is a crisis that is not within the power of the GAA to resolve. We know that our clubs will fight as hard as they can to continue to exist, either by coming together at underage level or through full amalgamations. We can, of course, review our rules to make them flexible enough to allow clubs and teams to continue. But rural decline is a problem that must be a priority for government. The starting point is to challenge the accepted truth that this decline is inevitable and irreversible. The Commission for the Economic Development of Rural Areas (CEDRA), chaired by Pat Spillane, made proposals that demonstrate the potential of rural Ireland to actively participate in its own economic development. It also emphasised the need for co-ordinated policy-implementation mechanisms across government and agencies. The future of rural Ireland demands that we see results from the work of CEDRA. This is vital for the GAA, too – consider for a moment the future of the GAA in rural areas if current population trends continue. We are struggling to cope with both the growth of population in urban areas and the decline in rural Ireland. We cannot be idle bystanders and neither can we take on the primary role of government to support the development of rural areas. What we must do is to lend our voice to those of other organisations that are advocating the implementation of a clear national policy on rural Ireland. CEDRA provided a template, and it is now time for urgent and effective action.

World Games 2016

The Etihad Airways GAA World Games 2016 was hosted in Ireland for the first time in August 2016. Fifty-six teams from units all over the world travelled to Dublin to participate in a week of competition and games aimed at showcasing and celebrating the international dimension of the GAA. The opening ceremony took place at half-time in the All-Ireland senior hurling semi-final between Kilkenny and Waterford on August 7. 112 players – two players per team – took part in the ceremony, and, as a prelude to the team parade, members of the South African Gaels teams entertained the crowd at half-time in the minor hurling game with traditional South African song and dance. That evening, the blend of tradition and diversity that characterises the ethos of the GAA featured strongly in the Cultural Heritage Concert that took place at the Helix, DCU. The special concert featured celebrated national artists, including Damien Dempsey and the Artane Band, while performances by artists from South Africa, China and Japan also featured alongside over 100 GAA musicians and dancers.

In conjunction with the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, a Global Games Development Forum was hosted on August 8 in the Fitzgerald Debating Chamber, UCD. The Forum focused on the growth and impact of the GAA internationally, as delegates discussed the strengths, challenges and opportunities for future growth of the GAA abroad. The Forum also provided an opportunity to showcase some of the projects and initiatives that international units are currently undertaking, many of which are jointly supported by the GAA and the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade through the Global Games Development Fund. Eleven speakers from various international units gave presentations that outlined the practical experiences of various international units in the development, provision and sustainability of Games Development initiatives and projects. It also enabled participants to network with units/clubs from across the globe and to exchange information, knowledge and ideas. One important insight to emerge was that each unit operates in a unique context and that a one-size-fits-all approach will not have the desired impact.

The tournament itself featured Gaelic football, Ladies football, hurling and camogie, and took place on six pitches in UCD. The unique nature and value of the games was reflected in the fact that twenty-seven indigenous teams competed. A total of 254 games were contested, including eight finals played in Croke Park on Friday August 8, which attracted 3,000 spectators. The finals were contested by four Irish-born and four indigenous teams in each of the four codes.

The success of the Etihad Airways GAA World Games 2016 is due to the co-operation and support provided by all the international units, key partners and the staff in the Games Development Department, who spared no effort to ensure that it would be – and was – a truly memorable event and experience for all involved. The success of the event emphasised the terrific work being undertaken by our international units in increasing participation in our games.

Stadium Development

In November the IRFU presented a list of potential venues to be used in the event of a successful bid to stage the Rugby World Cup in 2023. Eight of the venues listed are GAA stadiums: Croke Park; Casement Park, Belfast; Páirc Uí Chaoimh, Cork; Fitzgerald Stadium, Killarney; Nowlan Park, Kilkenny; McHale Park, Castlebar; Pearse Stadium, Galway and Celtic Park, Derry. It is unlikely that, in the final selection, all eight will be included, but the use of a number of our stadiums presents an opportunity to bring several of our grounds up to a recognised international standard. A successful bid for the World Cup will demand government investment in upgrading some of these venues, but it is likely that much of that expenditure will go towards the provision of temporary facilities for the duration of the tournament. The outcome of the bid will be known in November 2017. If Ireland is successful, the logical step for the GAA would be to enter discussions on how any temporary facilities could be made permanent and on the costing and funding of such an arrangement. The staging of the World Cup would provide a huge boost for the Irish economy; with good long-term planning it can also leave a very significant and positive legacy for the GAA.

In the meantime, progress continues on the development of two of our major stadiums. As I write, work on the new Páirc Uí Chaoimh is on schedule. It is a spectacular development, and Cork County Committee deserves credit for the vision and determination that is helping to realise this project.

As for Casement Park, a new planning submission will be made shortly for its redevelopment, the culmination of an exhaustive and detailed consultation process to address the reasons that led to the original planning award being overturned after a judicial review. The Ulster Council's Casement Park Project Board, under the leadership of Tom Daly, and with the support of Antrim County Committee, has striven to address the concerns of local residents on safety and traffic, and of the Casement Park Social Club; this is reflected in an impressive new design. Despite the delays, I remain confident that a new Casement Park will be built.

Pitch Maintenance

In last year's report to Congress I wrote about the need to develop a more scientific approach to pitch maintenance, noting that the growth in the number of county training centres and the increasing number of clubs that are developing additional pitches emphasised the importance of properly protecting and sustaining these important assets. In March, Ard Chomhairle approved the establishment of a National Pitch Maintenance Workgroup under the chairmanship of Kieran McGann (Corcaigh), and with the active support of Damian McLaverty, General Manager of the Golf Course

Superintendents Association of Ireland. The goals of the workgroup are clear: (i) to raise the standard of pitch surfaces; (ii) to provide education and information on best practice in sports-turf management; (iii) to deliver optimum playing-surface standards and usage levels; (iv) to protect and maximise investment in club and county pitches; (v) to ensure that pitches are maintained and presented as professionally as possible.

The workgroup organised a National Education Day for GAA groundsman at the National Games Development Centre at Abbotstown in May. Fifty-six people from eighteen counties attended, which was a disappointingly low number. The difficulty in convincing counties to address the challenge of pitch maintenance was also evident in efforts to organise provincial seminars. The workgroup remains undeterred, however, and, as part of its efforts to highlight this important issue, is launching a GAA National Pitch Award scheme for 2017. My sense is that many counties have not yet realised how important pitch maintenance is for the Association. Confronting that lack of awareness has to be a priority for 2017.

Strategic Plan

At the half-way point of our Strategic plan 2015-2017, it is right that we reflect on both the progress we have made in the attainment of the plan's objectives and on the areas in which we need to re-focus our efforts.

The plan was launched in March 2015. It sets six goals to guide our activities, identifies thirty-two strategies to achieve these goals and defines measures of success. Devising such a plan is the easy part; implementing it is the difficult bit, as it requires the co-operation of many individuals and units. But thanks to the work of the Strategic Plan Implementation sub-committee and to staff members and volunteers, the plan's objectives are being turned into reality in many areas. In the past eighteen months we have:

- delivered an ambitious Club Leadership Development Programme to over 1,000 club officers;
- implemented new models of participation to address decreases in participation (e.g. Super Games Centres and the Celtic Challenge);
- developed a Membership Card Programme to reward members for their membership of their clubs;
- reformed inter-county grading structures to reduce the demands on talented players in the 17-21 age bracket;
- launched a new national procurement programme to help clubs achieve savings on common products and services;
- agreed a new long-term funding framework for the GPA, which meets the agreed objectives of our shared approach;
- developed a new official GAA website, GAA.ie.

23 July 2016; Tipperary manager Liam Kearns at the final whistle of the GAA Football All-Ireland Senior Championship, Round 4A, game at Kingspan Breffni Park in Co Cavan.

These are just some examples of the progress we have made in implementing the Strategic Plan. A detailed breakdown of the objectives achieved to date has been provided in the recently published Mid-Point Progress Report. I would encourage you to read this report.

Implementation efforts have been guided by the Strategic Plan Implementation sub-committee and the superb work of Ruairí Harvey. In the sometimes-hecktic day-to-day activities, it can be easy to lose sight of what the Association seeks to achieve through its Strategic Plan. The Strategic Plan Implementation sub-committee, however, has maintained a keen sense of priorities and has not allowed short-term pressures to take precedence over longer-term strategic goals.

It is important to note that much still remains to be done. For the remaining eighteen months of the life of the Strategic Plan, we will continue to work hard towards the achievement of our remaining goals.

Investing in Leaders

Our club officers, by virtue of their various functions and roles within their clubs, the work they do and the impact this has on their clubs and communities, should be seen as leaders. It is right, then, that the Association invests in our club officers as leaders, which is exactly what it seeks to do through the Club Leadership Development Programme. At its simplest, the programme enables the principal club officers – Chairperson, Secretary, Treasurer and PRO – to carry out their roles more efficiently. Participants in the programme are prepared for new responsibilities and are equipped to make a more effective contribution to their clubs, communities and to the Association.

Since its launch in February 2016, 1,060 club officers in eighteen counties have completed the programme. The practical seven two-hour modules in the programme are delivered by our team of Leadership Associates. It was recognised from the outset that the quality of the programme would be dictated by the quality of this group, so forty Associates with experience of being officers and of facilitating adult learning were selected and given four full days of training. Through the programme, participating officers have gained a greater understanding of shared challenges in clubs, examined ways to approach common problems, and accessed information to make better-informed decisions on club matters. Ongoing evaluation and feedback have reassured us that this investment in leadership development has resulted in our officers being more confident in their understanding of their roles, more efficient in meetings, more knowledgeable about the resources and supports available to them, and better able to communicate with their members and external units. Online resources have been developed to complement the face-to-face aspects of the programme, and all participating officers receive a Certificate of Achievement.

The aim is to deliver the programme in all thirty-two counties before the end of March 2017. One hundred additional modules have been requested from counties and a process is under way to agree dates and venues for these events.

Dermot Early Youth Leadership Initiative (DEYLI)

This initiative expanded in 2016 from its three-county pilot to reach 130 young people aged 15-18 years in seventy-three clubs in counties Kildare, Dublin, Roscommon, Galway, Cork, Tipperary, Donegal and Monaghan.

In 2016, eighty of these participants graduated from NUIG with a FETAC Level 6 Foundation Certificate in Youth Leadership and Community Action. The Earley family were represented at the graduation in October by Dermot's wife, Mary, and his daughter, Anne-Marie. Dermot Jr remains the patron of the initiative.

The programme's partnership with Foróige and NUI Galway is just one of the reasons why the testimonies of the participants – and indeed of their parents and guardians – is so positive. Another is the dedication of the thirty-seven volunteer tutors who facilitated the creative and innovative content. National Health and Wellbeing Co-ordinator, Stacey Cannon, has been the driving force of the programme for the GAA. The challenge now is to find appropriate funding or philanthropic support to employ a dedicated co-ordinator to ensure that the DEYLI achieves its full potential and becomes available on an annual basis to interested young members of the Association and our future leaders.

1916 Commemoration

The GAA played a prominent part at both local and national levels in the commemoration of events that marked the centenary of the 1916 Rising. Five particular events marked the Association's contribution at national level:

“The centrepiece of the GAA commemoration took place on April 24, 100 years by date from the beginning of the Rising”

- Just before Christmas 2015 the Association published The GAA and Revolution in Ireland 1913-1923, a book of essays edited by Gearóid Ó Tuathaigh, Professor Emeritus in History at NUI Galway. Leading writers in the research fields of modern Irish history and the history of sport – Eoghan Corry, Mike Cronin, Paul Darby, Diarmaid Ferriter, Dónal McAnallen, James McConnel, Richard McElligott, Cormac Moore, Seán Moran, Ross O’Carroll, Gearóid Ó Tuathaigh, Mark Reynolds and Paul Rouse – explored the impact on ordinary life of the decade between the Lockout of 1913 and the end of the Civil War. They examined the effects of the First World War, the 1916 Rising and its aftermath, the emergence of nationalist Sinn Féin and its triumph over the Irish Parliamentary Party, as well as the War of Independence (1919-1921) and the Civil War (1922-23). All of these events and issues were examined as they related to the GAA.

- In February and March 2016 the GAA Museum hosted a series of lectures, Revolutionary Ireland 1913-1923, which complemented Professor Ó Tuathaigh’s volume and in which distinguished historians Aogán Ó Fearghail, Uachtarán, (whose lecture was on Gaelic Sunday 1918), Tim Pat Coogan, Paul O’Brien, Professor Diarmaid Ferriter, Dr. William Murphy and Liz Gillis presented a series of engaging lectures over six consecutive weeks, looking at various facets of the revolutionary period in Ireland.

- The centrepiece of the GAA commemoration took place on April 24, 100 years by date from the beginning of the Rising, when Laochra was presented in Croke Park at the conclusion of the Allianz Football League Division One and Two finals. The spectacular pageant featured almost 2,000 dancers, singers, musicians, entertainers and members, and presented the story of Ireland in eight scenes, beginning with the Myths and Dreams of an Ancient Land that took us through the folklore of Cuchullain to the 1916 Rising and the new Ireland of 2016. The event took place before an audience of 80,000 and was very well received. The concept for the commemoration was developed by Tyrone Productions who did an outstanding job in articulating the aspirations of the GAA through the pageant.

- On June 18 the final of the Provincial Council of Britain’s inter-county Shield competition was played on a pitch on the site of the internment camp at Frongoch (Wales) to commemorate the fact that Gaelic football games were played regularly by internees who were imprisoned in Frongoch after the 1916 Rising. Gloucestershire and Hertfordshire contested the game for the Wolfe Tone Cup in this unique setting, with Gloucestershire emerging as winners. It was a memorable event, and spectators felt the force of history as the players contested the final in the same surroundings that had been a Croke Park for the participants in daily games during their imprisonment 100 years ago.

- The final event in the national programme to commemorate the Rising was a Summer School hosted by the GAA Museum from 30 June to 2 July, the theme of which was The GAA and Revolution in Ireland 1913-1923. A panel of distinguished historians delivered lectures that considered the GAA’s role in the revolutionary period and the effect of the events of the period on the GAA.

I would like to acknowledge the role of our archivist, Mark Reynolds, in the organisation of these events and to extend my gratitude to the members of our History and Commemorations Committee.

Bloody Sunday

The Bloody Sunday Graves Project continued in 2016, ensuring that those victims of the tragic events at Croke Park on November 21, 1920 are appropriately remembered. On the 95th anniversary, in 2015, a headstone was unveiled in Glasnevin Cemetery on the grave of one of the victims, Jane Boyle. Since then, with the assistance of the Glasnevin Trust and journalist Michael Foley, author of The Bloodied Field – the outstanding book on the events of Bloody Sunday – we have been working with the families of two other victims, James Teehan and Daniel Carroll, to erect headstones on what were previously unmarked graves. There are still five Bloody Sunday victims in unmarked graves in Dublin and Tipperary on which we hope to erect headstones before the centenary year of 2020.

Sponsorship and Marketing

The GAA enjoyed a good year in terms of sponsorship, renewing several contracts and attracting new sponsors for existing competitions, demonstrating that value continues to be delivered to partnerships. In total, ten sponsorship agreements were concluded in 2016.

For the All-Ireland senior hurling championship, the contract with Centra was renewed for a four-year period, while a three-year contract with Littlewoods Ireland was announced in December. There were two renewals for the All-Ireland senior football championship: SuperValu signed up for a further four-year term through to 2019 and eir renewed for five years up to 2020.

Allianz, one of the GAA's longest-serving partners, renewed their title sponsorship of the Allianz Leagues for a further five-year term up to 2020. Allianz also sponsors Cumann na mBunscol and the GAA's international over the top (OTT) broadcast service, GAAGO.

Specsavers renewed its Hawk-Eye sponsorship for three more years (2016-18), while Sure (Unilever) became the GAA's first Match Statistics sponsor in an agreement that runs from 2016 to 2018. EirGrid, our U-21 football championship sponsor, also became the GAA's first ever Timing sponsor in a four-year agreement through to 2019. Bord Gáis Energy renewed their title sponsorship of the BGE U-21 hurling championship by signing up until 2020 in a five-year agreement, and a new partner was welcomed as title sponsor of the Féile tournaments in the form of John West, which agreed a three-year term from 2016 to 2018.

We are indebted to the support of all our sponsors. We believe that the number of renewals completed in 2016 confirms that our partnerships work for both the GAA and the sponsor.

We continue our own efforts to promote our competitions. In 2016 we rolled out phase two of our Be There. All the Way. campaign in several media, including TV, radio, press, digital, social media and outdoor advertising. We also developed a specific campaign to target families and GAA supporters who may not have experienced a live game before. The #WellWorthIt campaign promoted the great-value ticket offers available for families, as well as the entertainment and atmosphere of a live game. Our sponsors also engaged in a wide range of innovative promotional activities, which significantly increased the visibility of our games.

Croke Park Stadium Overview

In 2016 over 1.3 million people attended thirty event days, three concerts, eight World Games finals, twelve days of Go Games and four days of Cumann na mBunscol finals in the Croke Park Stadium, all taking place without any safety incidents to note. The events highlight was the Laochra celebration in April, while Bruce Springsteen played two sell-out shows in May and there was also a very successful concert by Beyoncé. There was a partial pitch replacement after the concert events with no adverse effects on playability or aesthetics. Once again, we must congratulate our pitch management team, led by Stuart Wilson, for the continuing high standard of their work.

In April, Croke Park became the first stadium in the world to obtain certification to the newest international Environmental Standard ISO 14001:2015. The stadium was also successfully recertified to the international standards for Sustainability Event Management and Health and Safety Management. Croke Park was awarded the Excellence in Waste Management Award at the annual Green Awards, and our Environmental and Sustainability Management Group was awarded the Unsung Hero Award at the 2016 Stadium Business Awards. Croke Park has diverted 1,563 tonnes of waste from landfill since

“2,000 dancers, singers, musicians, entertainers and members, and presented the story of Ireland in eight scenes, beginning with the Myths and Dreams of an Ancient Land that took us through the folklore of Cúchullain to the 1916 Rising and the new Ireland of 2016”

2014. We have reduced the amount of waste generated within the stadium by 30% and are maintaining 0% of waste to landfill for the third year in a row, which means that not one piece of waste has been sent to landfill.

The stadium and its Meetings and Events business continue to deliver a strong dividend to the Association with a €7.5 million contribution in 2016. Capital expenditure is high, reflecting the age of the building and the need to have a continuous programme of repair and maintenance. It is estimated that this could cost up to €5 million per annum for the next ten years; however, this will ensure that Croke Park retains its status as one of Europe's top stadiums.

GAA Museum

The GAA Museum continues to provide an outstanding cultural experience to visitors, highlighting our games and their place in Ireland's social history. In 2016 there were 153,000 visitors to the museum and to the Skyline and stadium tours in Croke Park. In addition to the public tours, private group tours are very popular and include active retirement groups, tour-operator groups, schools groups, language schools and GAA clubs. The museum is part of the new Dublin Northside Attractions (DNA) route, which includes Glasnevin Cemetery Museum, Jameson Distillery, Botanic Gardens and GPO Witness History; the museum is also part of the City Sightseeing bus tour route. A new exhibition, 'Ireland's Olympians', was launched in May. It displays and celebrates the sportsmen and sportswomen who have represented Ireland and achieved success at Olympic level.

In August 2016 four players were inducted into the GAA Museum Hall of Fame: the late Dermot Earley (Roscommon) and John O'Keeffe (Kerry) in football, and Tony Doran (Wexford) and John Connolly (Galway) in hurling. An event was held in the museum for the players and their families to celebrate their achievements and their contribution to Gaelic games.

Communications

A major redesign and upgrade of the GAA's online presence, including a revamped GAA.ie website, was introduced in 2016. The new website, along with increased usage of social media, has provided better access to important news, information, fixtures and results in a user-friendly and intuitive manner. It has also enabled the Association to provide more comprehensive match-day coverage, including live updates, images and video content. One particular initiative, Fanwall, has been a great success, allowing attendees at matches to have their pictures and messages displayed on the big screens at venues. Usage of Fanwall has been especially successful with younger spectators at our games.

The GAA launched its Snapchat account during the 2016 championship. Working directly with Snapchat HQ in the US, we built a public 'Snapchat Story' for the All-Ireland senior hurling championship final that was viewed by 300,000 people in Ireland and Britain, and had 15,000 submissions of content, figures that augur well for future digital growth. Our involvement in Snapchat will increase in 2017.

The GAA's monthly Club Newsletter underwent a full revamp in 2016. This should be essential reading for all clubs; the focus now is on ensuring that as many members as possible get a copy of the newsletter. It is sent to every club secretary in the Association, whose responsibility it is to share it with their members and/or make it available through their club websites.

Information Technology

Under the direction of our Chief Information Officer, Tomás Meehan, the GAA IT Department is responsible for delivering robust and reliable IT services to members of the Association at all levels from club and county to national committees. The significant investment made by the Association in its IT infrastructure and systems in recent years continued in 2016. Some of the key developments over the past year are summarised below.

Infrastructure

Croke Park WiFi

The upgrading of a major component of the core IT Infrastructure at Croke Park, the roll-out of High Density WiFi, was completed in spring 2016. This investment allows up to 25,000 patrons to access free, high-speed internet connectivity over the Croke Park WiFi network when attending the stadium; the upgrade has performed superbly over the ten months since deployment. The areas covered include internal sections of levels 4, 5 and 6 in the Hogan, Davin and Cusack Stands, as well as all seats in the bowl on levels 5 and 6. The new High Density WiFi network has also become a significant asset for Croke Park meetings and events through its availability to attendees at conferences or other events in the stadium.

Provincial and County Grounds

Appropriate IT infrastructure is required to be in place at county grounds to enable services such as ticket scanning, CCTV, public address, press/media facilities and basic office functionality. In 2016 IT infrastructure upgrades were implemented in Cusack Park, Ennis, O'Moore Park, Nowlan Park, Fitzgerald Stadium, the Gaelic Grounds and St. Tiernach's Park. Significant additional IT network upgrades were also implemented in Thurles to enable the use of Hawk-Eye in 2016 and significant work has been completed with the Páirc Uí Chaoimh project team in Cork to ensure that appropriate IT infrastructure is in place to support the needs of the redeveloped stadium.

National Games Development Centre

The GAA IT Department was actively involved in providing the appropriate IT infrastructure – including LAN, WiFi and broadband connectivity – for the National Games Development Centre at Abbotstown. An online booking system was also deployed, enabling the effective management of the various pitches, dressing rooms, meeting rooms and other facilities.

Applications

Significant effort has been made in 2016 to ensure that the key IT applications used in the GAA continue to be invested in and enhanced to meet the Association's needs.

National GAA Membership Card and Rewards Programme - grma

A major new programme to add value to membership of the GAA began in 2016. The programme, called grma (an abbreviation of 'go raibh maith agat', an expression of gratitude to our members), is open to members who sign up online. Those who participate in the grma programme will receive a membership card enabling them to avail of benefits including priority access to tickets for games, discounts and other promotions. They will also be able to accumulate points for participating in GAA activities and to redeem these points for rewards for either themselves or their clubs. Further grma details will be communicated throughout 2017.

Membership Management

The need to provide clubs with better systems to manage day-to-day engagements with their members (e.g. registrations, subscription payments, communications on club-related activities) has been identified. A significant exercise was undertaken in 2016 to determine specific requirements. Initiatives to improve the IT systems available to clubs will be undertaken in 2017.

Digital Communications

The Digital Archive project to digitise up to 500 historical matches – being delivered in conjunction with the Broadcast Authority of Ireland and RTÉ – continued in 2016, and is due for completion in 2017. This digitised footage will potentially be made available to view on the GAA website, as will footage of recent matches.

Many clubs already have excellent websites and provide great coverage of their clubs' activities on those sites. However, a significant number of clubs have neither the resources nor the expertise to develop a website; in order to support these clubs, a generic website template has been developed and is available for use by any club. This website template can be customised and modified to the needs of an individual club by anyone with basic computer skills. Over 200 clubs have signed up to use the template, with great success, and it is intended to extend the offering to cover the needs of county websites in 2017.

IT Security and Governance

Working with the IT and Communications Committee, the GAA IT Department has undertaken significant work to continue to manage and improve the security and governance of IT within the Association. Guidance relating to information security and data protection requirements have been provided to GAA units, while information relating to risks associated with cyber threats has been shared. An internal IT audit has been conducted by Deloitte and the Association's auditors, Mazars, who evaluated the controls in place for key IT systems. An external security review and security penetration test were conducted in 2016 to ensure that the GAA's IT systems are secure.

An IT Officer Forum has been established to build stronger links between the GAA IT Department and IT officers at county and club levels, and regular sessions have been held with this group via teleconference and in Croke Park.

Games Development

The Go Games and Kellogg's GAA Cúl Camps have had a transformative impact both on participation levels among children and the manner in which they are being provided with a child-centred, games-based and fun-filled approach to learning and development. Attendance at the 2016 Kellogg's GAA Cúl Camps broke all records, with 127,473 boys and girls participating in camps in July and August, a 25% increase on 2015 figures. This means that the camps are now one of the biggest child-sport promotions in the world, a testament to the intrinsic appeal of Gaelic games to this age cohort.

Go Games, and awareness of the developmental ethos underpinning the Go Games model, goes from strength to strength. National Go Games Week took place from March 21 to April 3, 2016. Two full days of blitzes took place in Croke Park with 1,152 children from clubs throughout the country taking part. Blitzes also took place in each county with 30,000 boys and girls getting to play Go Games during that period. Go Games week was just the start of the playing season and thousands more children got an opportunity to participate throughout the year.

GAA Super Games Centres are participation hubs for players aged 12-16 years that have been introduced to address the current deficit in youth participation. A player can attend a centre, which may be taking place in either a club or school, at a pre-determined time for an hour a week. During the hour, the player gets an opportunity to play small-sided Gaelic games. The centres run for a minimum of six weeks and often continue for over twelve weeks. In 2016 activities took place in more than eighty Super Games Centres. In recognition of this, a National Super Games Centre Day was held in Croke Park in September. All provinces were represented through seventeen schools from thirteen counties that participated. 240 pupils aged 13-15 years had the opportunity to play small-sided games in Croke Park with 125 pupils playing hurling and 115 pupils playing Gaelic football.

To date, our retention strategies have been largely based on the provision of formal (competitive) games. All the drop-out evidence suggests that a participatory pathway is required at youth level. The key requirement is that as many players as possible are provided with a meaningful programme of pre-scheduled games that affords each team an opportunity for success relative to their standard of performance.

In 2016 the National Hurling Development Committee developed and launched a new national hurling competition known as the Celtic Challenge to replace the All-Ireland minor B and C hurling championships. The Celtic Challenge is a developmental competition for 16- and 17- year-olds who are not participating in state examinations. Thirty-one counties were represented in the Celtic Challenge and a total of thirty-eight teams – including regional teams – participated. The competition ran from May 4 to June 18, during which more than 1,000 players participated in a total of 118 games. The Celtic Challenge culminated in a grand finals day in Nowlan Park on June 18, when ten teams participated in five finals (Divisions 1–5).

The Celtic Challenge also featured a number of new initiatives that were trialled together for the first time in Gaelic games. A feature of the competition was that match officials met with the teams prior to the game to explain the rules of the competition and to address any queries from the players.

The ‘Best and Fairest Award’ was also trialled. After every match, the referee chose one player from each team on the basis of their skill level as well as the respect they showed to the playing rules, match officials and their fellow players. Two players per team also wore a ‘respect’ armband, the purpose of which was to streamline communication and information between players and the referee in order to address repeat penalties by a particular player or by the team in general. In addition to this, an interchange system was used throughout the competition, which ensured every player on a squad could be involved in a game (i.e. using rolling substitutions).

The competition was a resounding success, and the number of players, games and teams in the Celtic Challenge contrasts with the thirteen games for seventeen teams provided under the old minor B and C hurling championship structure in 2015. The Celtic Challenge will continue in 2017 with forty-eight teams involved representing all thirty-two counties.

Coach Education

There has been consistent progress in 2016 in the review of the Award 2 Coach Education Programme; a revised

Award 2 is now being piloted. In addition to the overhaul and provision of the Association's formal Coach Education courses, significant progress has been made in the development and provision of bespoke coaching workshops and programmes that maximise informal learning at grassroots level. A number of counties deliver Club Coaching Visitation Programmes that are supplemented by a schedule of regionalised coaching workshops. The contributions of Games Development personnel at county and club levels are complemented by learning opportunities for teachers. In July and August almost 500 primary school teachers participated in twenty-two GAA Teacher Summer Courses. The course is practical in nature, and aims to introduce teachers to Gaelic games – hurling, Gaelic football, camogie, Ladies Gaelic football, GAA handball and rounders. There is a face-to-face element in the course, which runs over three days. Subsequently, eight hours of online modules are completed using the GAA's Learning and Development Community Portal. The GAA is now the leading provider of blended e-learning courses for primary school teachers.

The Association's Learning and Development Portal – learning.gaa.ie – is now a highly valued resource for volunteer coaches. Over 32,000 volunteers are registered users of the portal. The portal provides an opportunity for coaches to participate in online coach-education courses, but it also hosts a number of important resource materials for coaches, including the GAA Activity Planner, which allows coaches to plan and save their weekly sessions, whether for child, youth or adult players. All of the Association's physical coaching resources are now published online (e.g. Fun Do Coaching Manuals, Cúl Camp Coaching Resources); in addition, a 'Skill of the Month' is published on the site. There is also a GAA Learning YouTube Channel with over 1,000 videos that have attracted almost 400,000 views.

Finally, the National Games Development Conference, held annually in Croke Park, has become the preeminent event in the coach education diary. The 2017 GAA Games Development Conference took place on January 6 and 7, and focused on issues related to players along the playing pathway (child, youth and adult players). There was a special games-based forum, including presentations by expert hurling and Gaelic football coaches such as Paul Kinnerk, (coach, Limerick senior hurling team, 2017), Mick Bohane, (coach, Clare senior football team, 2016) and former Cavan footballer and coach to Greater Western Sydney AFL Club, Nicholas Walsh.

In addition to keynote speakers and parallel workshops, there was a specially constructed Researchers Exhibition, where a range of researchers from Irish third-level institutions presented their research findings, highlighting how this can influence the work of GAA coaches. Over 700 coaches from all over the country attended the conference, an indication of the appetite and enthusiasm amongst volunteer coaches to continue improving and informing themselves.

It is essential that every effort be made to perpetuate a games-based approach to training and development and to ensure that it accounts for 80% of all training inputs. This is not to diminish the importance of the more scientific contributions – be they physical fitness, psychological factors, or match analysis – but these, ideally, should not account for more than 20% of the total training input. The centrality of the game should never be underestimated. Indeed, if the quality of games in the 2016 provincial club championships is anything to go by, there is a strong justification for reduced preparation times, more regular games and a philosophy of players going out to express themselves, as opposed to playing to a particular game-plan. Sometimes, less is more.

In 2017 a review led by Gary Keegan, the former Director of the Irish Institute of Sport, will consider the effectiveness of activities, processes and controls in place for Games Development in order to establish to what degree activities are operating in a systematic way and how well Games Development is reaching its objectives as detailed in the 2015-2017 Strategic Plan. Specifically, the exercise will review and assess (i) the National Games Development Policy and Strategy; (ii) the alignment of the National Games Development Strategy with GAA policy and values; (iii) leadership, management and operational practices within Games Development structures at national, provincial and county levels; and (iv) funding processes and measurement processes in place to assess return on investment.

GAA Handball

The year 2017 was one of further progress for GAA Handball. Participation levels continue to rise, crowds at finals are growing, while the announcement of a brand new National Centre marks the beginning of an exciting era for the game.

The move to a festival-style weekend of finals in the 40x20 code saw a large crowd turn out in Kingscourt (Cavan) in March for what was a hugely successful event, which culminated in the All-Ireland Singles finals. The 60x30 finals returned to Croke Park in September and, with a sell-out crowd on both occasions, proved to be great occasions for the traditional game.

The biggest growth area at present is in the One Wall code. The One Wall game is a simple, cost-effective way to introduce handball and is also an excellent addition to any school or club. I would encourage all GAA clubs to embrace the game of handball and to consider introducing the One Wall code, which can be accommodated in almost every existing clubhouse or sports hall, or on an outdoor wall, by the installation of floor and wall markings, details of which are available on gaahandball.ie. It is very inexpensive, offers an enjoyable recreational outlet for members of all ages and helps attract new members. Many top players of hurling and football have spoken of the benefits of playing handball, notably through improving hand-eye co-ordination and their speed and reaction times. It is also a pleasant way to stay fit in winter.

Perhaps the best news for the handball community came in September with the announcement that the GAA has agreed to work with Dublin City Council on the reconstruction of Sackville Avenue. This will provide new housing, will lead to the building of a world-class National Handball and Community Centre, will involve the demolition of the existing Croke Villas, and will create a new entrance to Croke Park to take pressure off other local streets.

These new arrangements were the fruits of a lengthy mediation process chaired by former Taoiseach, Bertie Ahern, which brought an end to the long-running dispute between Croke Park and the Irish Handball Council Sports Centre (IHSCS). The 2016 All-Ireland 60 x 30 semi-finals and finals took place in the IHSCS in September and October, and will continue to be played there until the new centre is built, with the GAA participating in the management of the existing premises.

The Healthy Club Project

The Healthy Club Project (HCP) continues to make the GAA a healthier place for our members; the sixty participating clubs in Phase 2 (at least one from each county) deserve great credit for their efforts. The growth and development of the HCP would not be possible without the continued support of Irish Life by way of their generous three-year corporate social responsibility (CSR) partnership with the Community and Health department of the GAA. The pioneering nature of this partnership was recognised when it was awarded CSR Programme of the Year at the Irish Sports Industry Awards last November

It's impossible to highlight in this report all the work being undertaken in every aspect of health, but we can recognise the positive effects the project is having on local clubs and communities, as evidenced by the contribution of Healthy Clubs to workshops at the 2016 National Health and Wellbeing Conference in Croke Park in October.

The HCP is considered one of Healthy Ireland's flagship programmes and our partnership with the HSE, the Department of Health, and the National Office for Suicide Prevention underlines the GAA's continued effort to support the wellbeing of our members and the communities. The HCP national co-ordinator, Aoife O'Brien, intends to bring Phase 2 to a successful conclusion in late 2017. It is planned to open participation to all interested clubs in early 2018.

Critical Incident Response Plan (CIRP)

The Community and Health section was called upon a record number of times in 2016 to support and guide units in dealing with a variety of challenging situations, which indicates a greater awareness of the supports available since the launch of the GAA's Critical Incident Response resource in 2015. Unfortunately, the majority of situations involve the tragic death of a member, although a critical incident is defined as any situation that overwhelms one's natural capacity to respond.

The critical incident response resource – available to all clubs to access at www.gaa.ie/community – is designed to help GAA units develop and maintain their own critical incident response plan, to follow recommended practices when an incident arises, to ensure a consistency of care for all members at such times, and to identify and access the range of national and local support services that are available in such circumstances.

A number of county Health and Wellbeing Committees facilitated the adoption of their county-level CIRP in 2016 and supported numerous clubs in preparing their own plans, with Louth and Laois showing great leadership in this area. The aim is for all county-level plans to be in place by the end of 2017; clubs, too, are encouraged to put their own plans in place. Such proactive steps will prove invaluable in the event of an unfortunate situation or incident.

Supporting Communities

Ronan Flynn in the Community and Health section continues to promote awareness of and participation in the GAA's Social Initiative, a project instigated by the former President Mary McAleese and her husband Martin, and one that remains close to the heart of many clubs. The Social Initiative is indicative of our values of inclusiveness and community identity, and supports our efforts to offer lifelong participation for all our members.

The GAA in 2016 played its part in the HSE's national emotional wellbeing campaign, #littletings. Following collaboration at provincial and county level (particularly in Connacht), the Community and Health team gave a distinctive GAA twist to the campaign at the All-Ireland football semi-final between Dublin and Kerry in August with evidence-based messages of support. Match-programme articles, stadium posters, pitch-side interviews and huge banners on the pitch before the throw-in and at half-time brought the messages to life to the capacity attendance in Croke Park. Videos involving GAA #littletings ambassadors Gary Sice (Galway), Alan O'Mara (Cavan) and Ashling Thompson (Cork) have been viewed and shared thousands of times, receiving excellent coverage on national and regional print and broadcast media with messages that promote self-help and advice on how to support others. (See www.yourmentalhealth.ie for more details.)

Colin Regan continued to represent the GAA on the inaugural Healthy Ireland Council and, at a European level, he represented the Association in the Sports Clubs for Health project, funded through Erasmus+. This latter group brings together representatives from a variety of European sports federations and associations with the aim of highlighting best practice in health promotion through sport. The GAA's community-based approach is of particular interest. All outputs, including new guidelines and resources for European sports governing bodies and clubs, will be launched at an EU Parliament event in Brussels in April 2017.

Child Safeguarding and Protection in the GAA

Under the direction of our Child Welfare and Safeguarding Manager, Gearóid Ó Maolmhichíl, the National Child Welfare and Protection Committee (NCWPC) oversees the implementation of our child safeguarding and protection strategy. It has established two sub-committees from among its membership and others, a Child Welfare Training sub-committee and a Legislation sub-committee to advise on the Association's child welfare responsibilities and on existing and pending relevant legislation. Both sub-committees played an important role in the amendment of our Code of Best Practice in Youth Sport with the recent publication of a sixth edition of Code of Behaviour (Underage), and also developed a new Club Children's Officer Training Programme, and trained seventy-five child welfare tutors and drafted a Designated Person's Training Programme for completion in 2017.

A NCWPC seminar in April examined the implications of Child Welfare Legislation on our current work, discussed the contents of the new Club Children's Officer Programme and explored the new GAA online vetting system. A second seminar for county Children's Officers in November broadened the discussion. Topics discussed included the impact of social media on young people, the Player Injury Fund, requirements for reporting allegations of abuse, an update on current legislation, and the procedures for dealing with breaches of the Code of Best Practice.

Child Protection in Sport Awareness Workshops

A revised version of the Child Protection in Sport Awareness Training Workshop was published in 2016 and the first Club Children's Officer Training programme was launched in November. Both programmes have been endorsed by Sport Ireland and are important in developing good practice at club level. They will be delivered by the GAA, the Ladies Gaelic Football Association (LGFA) and the Camogie Association, in line with our common approach to child welfare matters. Forty-one workshops took place in twenty counties in 2016, and a target of at least one workshop in every county has been set for 2017. In addition, arrangements are in place to have the programme delivered in Britain by local tutors in 2017.

Code of Best Practice/Code of Behaviour

The Code of Best Practice in Youth Sport, which incorporates our Code of Behaviour (Underage), is an agreed policy document subscribed to by the Gaelic Games Associations. It contains a broad range of guidance, considering issues such as the standards of conduct required of our coaches, details on our Code of Behaviour, social media guidance, recruitment, vetting information, player injury requirements, medical guidance and much more. The Code is enshrined in Rule 1:13 of the Official Guide and in the Rules of the LGFA and the Camogie Association. As it was being implemented, it became clear that there was a need to agree a structure to deal with breaches that may occur. Following discussions between the Associations and our legal advisors, the NCWPC developed a guidance document, Dealing with Breaches of the Code of Best Practice in Youth Sport, which is now available on gaa.ie/childwelfareandprotection.

Vetting

The vetting of GAA personnel who work in roles of responsibility with children and vulnerable adults is carried out by the National Vetting Bureau (NVB) in the Republic of Ireland and by AccessNI in the Six Counties. Since April 2016 it is an offence to engage a person to work with children unless that person has been vetted in advance of taking up such a role. This applies to GAA coaches of underage teams and to others who, on our behalf, carry out roles of responsibility with children.

While the AccessNI system has enjoyed the benefits of an online vetting application system, a similar process only came into being for vetting in the Republic of Ireland since the National Vetting Bureau (Children and Vulnerable Persons) Acts came into force in April 2016. This development has resulted in the turnaround time for vetting being reduced from weeks to days. Prior to the Vetting Act, the GAA had vetted in excess of 100,000 applicants on the island of Ireland under the NVB and AccessNI. Since it came into force, a further 13,000 people have been vetted through the GAA/NVB online system. The success of the online system has enabled us to agree access to applicants from the LGFA and Camogie Association from January 1, 2017.

Insurance

Property Insurance

Claims generated by weather-related incidents in recent years have placed pressure on property insurance rates. When undertaking development work, clubs may need to consider geography and previous weather incidents at the site. Ball-stop nets and damage from windstorms have generated significant claims and led to an increase in the excess that applies to claims for losses incurred. As clubs continue to invest in property resources, they must ensure that works are undertaken only by fully insured professional contractors. Claims for property damage due to defective design or workmanship are not covered under property policies.

As units focus on improving facilities, it is also important to provide for ongoing maintenance repair and replacement of existing resources. Lack of maintenance and upkeep of property can contribute to personal injury claims, and our experience of liability claims indicates that units are not adequately providing for the cost of ongoing maintenance.

Liability Insurance

The number of personal injury claims being pursued against GAA units continues to rise: ninety-one new claims were reported in the past year, with current paid/reserve estimates amounting to €2.87 million. The current five-year cost of claims to the Association is €13.5 million. Personal injury claims to the Association are averaging near €3 million annually. This is simply unsustainable.

Claims emanating from non-GAA use of properties are increasing: it is clear that, despite warnings, many units provide use of GAA property to third-party groups with minimal control of their activity. Failure to seek proof of insurance from persons or organisations using GAA property exposes the Association to risk that is not ours and to the financial cost of claims arising from this risk.

Player Injury Fund

We have highlighted before that a claims disparity across units and counties exists with respect to the level of team subscriptions paid to the fund versus the level of claims reimbursements drawn from the fund. With effect from 2017 a claims discount and claims loading will be incorporated into the Player Injury Fund subscription rates. This new model will be reviewed by the Risk and Insurance Committee in conjunction with claims data provided by Fund administrators Willis Towers Watson.

There has been a low take-up rate to an online claims-notification system for reporting incidents which may give rise to a claim under the Injury Fund, which was launched in 2014 as a result of feedback and requests from clubs. It has now been redesigned and enhanced following feedback from its limited number of users; the new system will be relaunched in 2017. Further enhancements to the Injury Fund and claims processing can only be undertaken if the online system is used. We hope that counties and clubs will use the improved system.

Human Resources

A key objective for the HR section in 2016 has been the further enhancement of the manager and employee self-service functions on the CoreHR Portal system, and there has indeed been an increase in the number of provincial- and county-based staff using the system. This enhancement has included the introduction of online performance reviews and work on the implementation of an online recruitment system, which will govern all aspects of the recruitment lifecycle from staff requisition through to the shortlisting and interview stages, and, ultimately, staff appointments. The recruitment project is currently at final testing stage and will provide a more streamlined and efficient process for Association recruitment when it is introduced early in 2017. In 2016 HR had responsibility for the management and co-ordination of over thirty-seven recruitment competitions at national, provincial and county levels. Over 1,480 job applications were processed, and over 300 candidates interviewed.

A Training Needs Analysis was completed in early 2016 to determine the training and development needs of staff, and HR has worked with Sport Ireland to provide an extensive training and development programme, not only to staff within Croke Park but also at provincial and county levels. A total of twenty-seven training courses were made available on an individual basis to staff members across all units, while a number of staff members have also availed of the Association's Further Education Policy. Others benefited from funding assistance to pursue third-level education courses. The HR section also facilitated an individually tailored, one-to-one Microsoft Office training course for County Secretaries.

An Ghaeilge

Maidir le ceist na Gaeilge, tá an-áthas ar Chumann Lúthchleas Gael go bhfuil ainm an Iar-Uachtarán, Seosamh Mac Donncha, luaite anois leis an scéim atá againn an Ghaeilge a chur chun cinn inár gclubanna agus atá á reachtáil againn i gcomhar le Glór na nGael agus Foras na Gaeilge.

Comhbhrón

In May 2016 the Association lost two distinguished former Presidents through the deaths of Jack Boothman and Joe McDonagh. They had served successive terms of office between 1994 and 2000; both were significant influences during that period as the Association faced up to the challenges posed by a changing Ireland.

Jack Boothman, the 31st President of the Association, was a proud son of Blessington and Wicklow. A man of warm personality, sharp wit and great sense of humour, Jack was beloved by members everywhere in the Association. He made history in that he was the first member of the Church of Ireland to become President of the GAA, and he had the rare ability to engage with people of all views and backgrounds. Both during and after his term as President, Jack never hesitated to express clear views on Association policy; his opinions, forcefully expressed, were always motivated by his loyalty to and concern for the Association. Jack suffered ill-health in his final years, yet remained a regular visitor to Croke Park, and his passion for the Blessington club, Wicklow and the GAA was as strong as ever until his death.

Joe McDonagh succeeded Jack as Uachtarán in 1997. He had already earned a national reputation as an outstanding Galway hurler, and added to his aura (as well as contributing a now-iconic moment in GAA and All-Ireland history) with his rendition of 'The West's Awake' after Galway's victory in the 1980 final. Joe was a charismatic man who inspired our members with his powerful oratory in both English and Irish. He had the great talent of being able to convey the ideals and vision of the GAA, while his marvellous personality and singing enlivened many a function. Joe was also an excellent administrator. He reached the highest office within the Association at a young age, and after his term of office served at national level in variety of roles. Until his untimely death, he was Chairman of the Community Development Committee, addressing challenges in which he had a huge personal interest, including those posed by emigration and rural depopulation.

The death of Ulster Council Secretary Danny Murphy in December also left a significant void within the GAA. We lost one of the most influential administrators in the long history of the Association. Danny transformed the status of the GAA in Ulster; his efforts, notably in building cross-community trust and in ensuring that the GAA finally got its fair rewards in terms of state investment in facilities, were responsible for enhancing the status of the Association within every sector of northern society. Always faithful to the mission and values of the GAA, yet utterly pragmatic, Danny gave strong and fearless leadership in a variety of roles at club, county, provincial and national levels. Few have had a greater impact on the growth and development of our Association. He was a great colleague and friend, and an invaluable source of advice. He is greatly missed.

Buíochas

As always, I am indebted to the many people with whom I interact on a regular basis in our shared aim of developing and strengthening the Association. I must thank, in particular, the members of An Coiste Bainistíochta and Ard Chomhairle, to whom all of our major decisions are entrusted. They take their roles extremely seriously; every issue is considered in a calm and considered way, with the single objective of doing what is best for the GAA. This objective is facilitated by the leadership style and skills of the Uachtarán, Aogán Ó Fearghail; he ensures that all voices are heard, and his thoughtful contributions and good humour have had a positive impact on the decision-making process. On a personal note, I am indebted to him for his constant support, and I greatly value the excellent working relationship that we enjoy.

I also want to acknowledge the important role of our provincial secretaries and to thank them for their constant support. We have a good working relationship and our regular meetings are important in ensuring that we are at one in the implementation of policy. We will greatly miss the late Danny Murphy. I wish his successor, Brian McEvoy, well as he takes over from his most distinguished predecessor.

I would also like to thank our county officers, who carry the burden of progressing matters within their jurisdictions and, especially, county secretaries, with whom my office has most day-to-day contact. Whether as full-time employees or volunteers, they are exemplary in the courteous and determined way they go about their work. My greatest debt of gratitude is to the staff in Croke Park. I am blessed to work with such a committed, talented and loyal group of people, with whom I enjoy working every single day. That is particularly true of Áine, Lorena and Teresa, who manage the work of my office so efficiently. Finally, I want to acknowledge the outstanding contribution of Séamus Ó Midheach who retired on December 31 after thirty-seven years of loyal and dedicated service to Croke Park and the GAA.

Conclusion

Whatever the outcome of Congress's deliberations on the central questions of the proposed new format for the All-Ireland football championship, on the limiting of replays and on the tightening of the fixtures calendar, individual counties will still be faced with the task of addressing the issues faced by clubs, namely that players of all ages and abilities must be catered for, that club players must be offered an adequate number of fairly scheduled, meaningful matches, and that inter-county players have a strong desire to play for their clubs (a factor that must be borne in mind by inter-county team managers). There is a core truth about the GAA that cannot be emphasised enough – the Association exists and thrives because of our clubs. It continues, therefore, to be a matter of crucial importance that the prosperity of our clubs be foremost in our minds in our decision-making. Counties have different structures in place and have different practices that have evolved over the years with regard to club-fixtures scheduling, but, whatever the individual nature of the challenge facing counties, the common goal of protecting and fostering the vibrancy of our clubs must act as our guiding principle.

“...whatever the individual nature of the challenge facing counties, the common goal of protecting and fostering the vibrancy of our clubs must act as our guiding principle.”

We have all lived through the recent and astonishing pace of change in the area of private and public communications afforded by new technology, and particularly where social media are concerned. Virtually anyone who wants to can have their opinions placed in the public domain. This democratisation comes with risks and responsibilities. Opinions are not truth, but, with sufficient repetition, opinions can assume, or be accorded, the status of irrefutable fact; little wonder, then, that the latest effect of internet/social media democratisation to cause concern is the phenomenon of ‘fake news’. It need hardly be said that the GAA inhabits this new social media landscape. It is regrettable that there is an excess of negative comment and personal criticism on social media of GAA players, managers and administrators. We have no control over this; all we can do is ask that our members refrain from speaking aggressively and indulging in personal abuse on social media. Such behaviour belittles the person who does so, belittles the Association and is not appreciated by our members.

While on the topic of new technology, we must recognise that the GAA will need to continue to commit substantial financial investments in this area if we are to maintain the standards necessary for the proper administration and functioning of a large and widespread organisation, and if we are to meet the expectations of our members and patrons and of the wide range of outside bodies with which we collaborate.

In 2018 the regrading of the inter-county minor level in hurling and football competitions from U-18 to U-17 comes into force. As this regrading concerns inter-county level only, individual counties will need to address the choice of whether to align their own county minor competitions with the new national grading or to remain with the U-18 age limit; counties will need to decide which age groupings best suit their needs. A related issue, arising from the decision of Congress 2016 to replace the U-21 football championship with an U-20 championship, is one now facing hurling: given the significant age gap between the new U-17 minor level and the existing U-21 hurling grade, hurling needs to consider whether to replace its U-21 competition by an U-20 one. My own belief is that this change should be made.

At the administration level, two developments should be noted. First, I would like to emphasise the great value of the Club Leadership Development Programme, which helps principal club officers carry out their roles more efficiently and make a more effective contribution to their clubs. Second, I would urge all concerned to remain committed to carrying out the programme of actions contained in our current Strategic Plan. We should look upon the plan as simply a series of agreed practical measures to improve our Association. You will have read in this report about the valuable progress that the plan has allowed us to make so far: what might have remained vague aspirations have been transformed into concrete actions that have benefited members, clubs and players. If we push through with the plan to the end, the GAA will be much the better for it.

In the area of player welfare, I look forward to the eventual findings of the research commissioned jointly by the GAA and the GPA on the demands placed on inter-county players and on the impact on players of the development of our games. The research findings will, I believe, contribute greatly to the achievement of our goal of helping inter-county players establish a proper balance between their sporting and personal lives, and between being club and county players.

Apart from these specific issues, our efforts continue to be directed towards recurring matters and pressures with which we are all familiar. Our volunteers work hard and must meet increasing demands on their time; as ever, then, we need to try to get more volunteers into the Association at club level. We must also continue to seek ways – through providing the proper structures and programmes of games – of combatting the dropout rate in the 13-19 age group. Elsewhere, the presence of fifty-six teams at the World Games in Dublin in August demonstrated that the international dimension of the GAA is becoming increasingly important, so we will need to support these units and facilitate the growth of our games abroad. At home, we need to remain vigilant about our presence at all levels of the education sector and to be supportive of the vital links between educational institutions and the GAA. And all of us involved in the governance of the Association must remain open to improving our ways of doing things and to insist on the proper financial management of our respective units.

These latter obligations can sound mundane and, at times, even a little onerous. But we all know why we comply with them – we love our games. There is nothing to get a GAA member excited in mid-winter like the memory of the season gone by or the prospect of the one to come. Forget All-Ireland finals – what about the first-round junior B match against the neighbouring parish on a cold and soggy March afternoon, or the chance of U-14 glory later in the year. For just about all of us, life outside of or without the GAA and its games is unimaginable. The GAA knits us into our communities and gives us back much more than we give to it. How fortunate we are.

Another season and another occasion where the restorative,
rejuvenating power of hurling on the soul was there for us all to savour.

In his match programme address before the 2016 All-Ireland final, Uachtarán Aogán Ó Fearghail put it perfectly when he said:

“Very little connects us to our ancient heritage like a game of hurling. Today’s teams are the finest of a truly wonderful vintage. As ash meet ash, echoes of Celtic warriors will be brought to life before our eyes on the hallowed turf of Croke Park. Hurling builds our uniqueness as a race, today’s games reveal it.”

Back in 2010 Tipperary won two All-Ireland hurling titles in the space of six unforgettable days in September.

First there was the apparent epoch defining victory over Kilkenny to deny the Cats the elusive five in a row. Then, the following Saturday, and with many of those senior stars like Paudie Maher and Noel McGrath in their ranks, the Premier romped to a 5-22 to 0-12 victory in an Under 21 final against Galway amid a carnival-like atmosphere in Thurles.

Tipperary had halted Brian Cody’s Cats and one of the greatest eras of success ever seen in the GAA. In cruising to an Under 21 title in the same week it was as if they were serving notice that the start of a new reign was upon us.

Only it didn’t quite work out like that.

It would take six years for the blue and gold storm that we were waiting for to finally arrive. But it happened in 2016 and if anything for Tipperary supporters, that extra wait made it all the more joyous when the success came.

The year started for Tipperary with a subtle change of stewardship. Michael Ryan, a selector with Liam Sheedy in 2010 and a part of the more recent backroom with another 2010 coaching veteran Eamonn O’Shea, was given the reins.

In truth, there were some doubts as to whether or not Tipperary could be awoken from the strange slumber which had followed the dizzy heights of September 2010.

There was little to dissipate those clouds of doubt as Tipperary mixed the good and the bad in the Allianz league and were picked off by Clare in the knock out quarter final stage.

The Allianz league had really belonged to two teams – Clare and Waterford.

Two counties and two panels of some of the most outrageous naturally gifted hurlers we have seen in a long time, and under the baton of Davy Fitzgerald and Derek McGrath – two young coaches and clever tacticians; men who are clearly deeply in love with the great game and in trying to master it.

Clare won all five of their matches in Division 1B and amassed a total of 6-107 along the way. A surprise home defeat to Dublin and a high scoring draw with Galway didn’t derail Waterford from making progress in Division 1A with Kilkenny also looking ominous.

The Deise struggled over Wexford and had a bit to spare over Limerick to make the Allianz league final. Clare saw off Tipperary and scored a phenomenal 4-22 to dominate Kilkenny’s 2-19 in the semi-final.

In the decider Clare and Waterford were like prize fighters circling each other and cancelling each other out. The closing minutes were dramatic as control swung from one end to the other – but the 0-22 apiece clash had also left room for improvement.

The replay was enthralling, with two last-gasp Tony Kelly points settling a cliff-hanger 2-19 to 1-23 in Thurles as Clare were Allianz league champions for the first time since 1978.

But within a handful of weeks Waterford were given the chance to inflict their revenge with Derek McGrath’s side superb in their Munster championship clash on June 5 with a fourth minute Maurice Shanahan goal putting them on the way to a deserved 1-21 to 0-17 victory over the Banner.

The victory put Waterford into the Munster final where they would meet a Tipperary team who had demolished a disappointing Cork 0-22 to 0-13 and then cleared a traditionally troublesome Limerick hurdle 3-12 to 1-16.

The Munster final on July 10 saw a young Waterford team ruthlessly taken apart by a Tipperary side looking like a very different proposition with a power and directness that was to be their new hallmark en route to a 5-19 to 0-13 victory with Seamus Callanan, John McGrath and Michael Breen rampant.

The early shots in the Leinster championship were fired by Westmeath who won all three of their matches in a preliminary round robin group that also featured the Kerry hurlers.

Dublin looked impressive when in atrocious conditions they dismantled Wexford at Croke Park, but the Dubs were then blitzed by a TJ Reid and JonJo Farrell inspired Kilkenny in the Leinster semi-final in Portlaoise.

Westmeath’s great run was abruptly halted by Galway in a quarter final with the Tribesmen then taking care of an Offaly side who came out of the preliminary round to see off neighbours Laois.

The Kilkenny-Galway Leinster final followed a familiar path with Galway contributing handsomely to the game – but Kilkenny ultimately having too much for them.

The qualifiers proved redemptive for Wexford – who scored a landmark first Championship win over Cork since 1956 – and also Clare who saw off Limerick to complete the quarter final pairings.

“Hurling is one of our greatest gifts as a nation, preserving and nurturing it for future generations one of our key responsibilities.”

13 August 2016: Colin Fennelly of Kilkenny scores his side's first goal under pressure from Barry Coughlan of Waterford in the eight minute during the GAA Hurling All-Ireland Senior Championship Semi-Final Replay game between Kilkenny and Waterford at Semple Stadium in Thurles, Co Tipperary.

Waterford and Galway comfortably ousted Wexford and Clare respectively to leave us with the top four teams in the country.

It was then, with the stakes for the destination of the Liam MacCarthy at their greatest, that the fireworks in the hurling summer really flared.

Waterford, mauled so badly in the Munster final, were underdogs against reigning All-Ireland champions Kilkenny.

But in a breath-taking encounter it took a late Walter Walsh goal and Conor Fogarty point to force a draw against an Austin Gleeson and Kevin Moran inspired Waterford, 1-21 to 0-24.

The replay a week later picked up where it left off, with Kilkenny certainly better, but Waterford in no way overawed or overwhelmed.

Colin Fennelly grabbed two goals for the Cats but Austin Gleeson and Jake Dillon also found the net and with the game four minutes into injury time there was a chance for Pauric Mahony to level the sides with a free from considerable distance – only for Kilkenny goalie Eoin Murphy to leap bravely and pluck it from over the crossbar and Richie Hogan nailing an equaliser for a 2-19 to 2-17 victory.

Not to be outdone, the second semi-final between Tipperary and Galway was another high quality tussle with Conor Cooney and Joe Cooney goals proving crucial but with Tipperary able to have a spread of influential players and scorers and a super sub goal from John O'Dwyer to get them to safety.

Since 2010 Kilkenny had won all of the matches of consequence against Tipperary. The spine of the great five in a row chasing Brian Cody team was gone but the Cats were on the verge of a third straight Liam MacCarthy with question marks still hanging over Tipperary.

Behind the headlines however, Michael Ryan's tweaks were clearly working in the Premier.

The emergence of minor star John McGrath onto the team as a prolific scoring threat, the arrival of the powerful Michael Breen in the middle and calming effect of James Barry at full back were crucial. When this was allied to the resurgence of inspirational leaders such as Paudie Maher, Brendan Maher and the magnificent Seamus Callanan – Tipperary were travelling in confidence.

Kilkenny had struggled to contain the pace and movement of Clare in the league semi-final and Tipperary mirrored that in the All-Ireland final as they were full value for their 2-29 to 2-20 victory.

Seamus Callanan scored an incredible 0-13 in one of the all-time great All-Ireland final displays. John O'Dwyer contributed 1-5 and John McGrath 1-3.

Like all great champions Kilkenny refused to surrender lightly but there were simply more questions than they had answers to.

It was the most emphatic Tipperary display at Croke Park since their win over Kilkenny in 2010 and they looked liberated as they cruised through the closing stages of the match. They needed to be at their best to deny Kilkenny and they did not disappoint.

It was as if the burden of expectations that followed that September week of glory in 2010 had finally been lifted from them.

The county also captured the All-Ireland minor title last September as they saw off Limerick in the decider and this will no doubt lead to more expectation.

But there was a maturity and a control about the Tipperary seniors of September 2016 that was at odds with the young stars who achieved so much so soon in 2010.

Premier fans will believe they can define a new era – but the summer showed that Waterford, Galway and Kilkenny are capable of still having a say and the great game has no intention of being predictable.

Waterford regrouped after their bitter semi-final disappointment to blitz their way to a memorable U-21 All-Ireland title.

No review of the hurling year would be complete without paying homage to Na Piarasigh who, given the year and its significance, produced something special in the AIB All-Ireland club senior hurling final on St Patrick's Day. Seamus Dowling and Kevin Downes inspired them to see off Cushendall 2-25 to 2-14 and become the first Limerick club to be crowned senior club champions.

Earlier in the year Bennettsbridge from Kilkenny defeated Abbeyknockmoy from Galway 1-17 to 1-14 in the club intermediate final at Croke Park. Glenmore made it a Kilkenny double in the junior final where they defeated Derry's Eoghan Rua 2-8 to 0-12.

It was a significant year for Meath hurling. All-Ireland U21 B winners, The Royals also won the Christy Ring Cup on two occasions when their initial clash with Antrim was refixed owing to an unfortunate scorekeeping error, but the Meath men again prevailed.

Mayo defeated Armagh 2-16 to 1-15 in the Nicky Rackard Final, while Louth defeated Sligo 4-15 to 4-11 in a high scoring Lory Meagher decider.

All of this in a year that also saw the launch of the new Celtic Challenge Cup at Under 17 level and prove a massive success with titles going back to teams representing Offaly, South Wexford, North Wexford, Waterford City and Wicklow.

Hurling is one of our greatest gifts as a nation, preserving and nurturing it for future generations one of our key responsibilities. The 2016 season proved the great game has a bright future.

Senior Football Review 2016

1 October 2016; Aidan O'Shea of Mayo in action against Cian O'Sullivan of Dublin during the GAA Football All-Ireland Senior Championship Final Replay match between Dublin and Mayo at Croke Park in Dublin.

Small margins, fine lines and the bounces of balls.

On the smallest things the destination of highly coveted championship medals are decided and rarely has there been a more obvious case in point as the Dublin footballers rounded off another championship season top of the pile.

In so doing, the now three-time All-Ireland winning manager Jim Gavin helped the county to their first back to back victories since 1976-77 at a time when the county's legendary rivalry with old foes Kerry dominated the footballing landscape.

While such an outcome was always possible; it was far from a foregone conclusion and the way in which the season played out reminded us that reigning champions are there to be shot at.

Losing one All-Star - Rory O'Carroll - is one thing but when another, 2015 player of the year Jack McCaffrey joined him on the sidelines opting to take a year out, the idea of having to replace a third of the starting back six seemed like a major ask.

While it was that, it wasn't an insurmountable obstacle for Gavin or his charges.

New challenges, new faces and crucially new accolades. And there were no shortage of those for the men in blue in what was truly a season to remember.

Not for the first time in recent seasons the league provided a portent of things to come as the year unfolded.

Dublin attacked the competition panzer-like claiming all of the points placed before them, opening up with a home win over Kerry and gathering points both home and away in an unblemished campaign.

While Down found the going tough in the top flight, Roscommon fully embraced their elevation to Division One claiming an away win over Kerry before securing a semi-final berth against the same opposition as Dublin and Donegal joined them in the last four.

Kerry more than atoned for their early season home hiccup against Roscommon with a commanding semi-final win at Croke Park in the repeat fixture while Dublin overpowered Donegal in another fixture that would be played out again before the year was out.

On April 24 the GAA celebrated the Centenary of the 1916 Rising with a spectacular pageant on the actual calendar anniversary of the seminal event.

Before that there were league honours to be presented.

The previous night Louth beat Antrim to claim division four honours while Clare raised eye-brows by beating Kildare in a win that signaled their intent ahead of a productive summer run.

On the Sunday Tyrone held off the challenge of Cavan to annex Division Two honours before Dublin and Kerry collided once again in the top flight decider.

Dublin maintained their hoodoo over the Kingdom running away in the closing stages with a comprehensive win that added further to their growing reputation.

During the months of February and March the clubs stole the limelight claiming the first All-Ireland medals of the season. In the senior final Ballyboden St Enda's held off Castlebar Mitchells.

The junior and intermediate titles went to Templeogue and St. Mary's Cahirciveen in a Kerry double over Mayo opposition.

Post-league the same question shrouded the onset of the championship. Could Dublin be toppled and how might this be brought about?

The early part of the season was not without its shocks.

Tipperary pulled off a major surprise by scoring a rare win over Cork while out west Galway finally dented Mayo's domination of Connacht.

Tipp's push was halted by Kerry in the Munster final but this did not herald the end of what turned out to be a memorable Tipperary odyssey.

Galway made full advantage of their Mayo scalp beating early season pace setters Roscommon - after a replay - while in the east Dublin's stranglehold on the Leinster championship continued with a second consecutive final win over Westmeath.

“New challenges, new faces and crucially new accolades. And there were no shortage of those for the men in blue in what was truly a season to remember.”

Ulster claimed the accolade of the most dramatic finale of the four finals as Peter Harte helped fuel a late push to finally shake off a resolute Donegal challenge.

In the background the qualifiers were not short on drama. Longford claimed wins over both Down and Monaghan while Clare saw off Laois, Sligo and Roscommon.

“Kerry more than atoned for their early season home hiccup against Roscommon with a commanding semi-final win at Croke Park in the repeat fixture.”

7 February 2016; Aidan O'Mahony, Kerry, in action against Ciaran Murtagh, Roscommon. Allianz Football League, Division 1, Round 2, Kerry v Roscommon. Fitzgerald Stadium, Killarney, Co. Kerry.

As expected Mayo breathed life back into their campaign overcoming tricky assignments against Fermanagh, Kildare and Westmeath.

Tipperary's bounce back came against Derry in Cavan before the quarter-finals came into view.

While Kerry had too much in reserve for Clare and Dublin persevered to break down the challenge of Donegal, the other two quarter-finals offered up more headlines.

Mayo held their nerve to pip Tyrone by a point in a nail biter in what was their toughest test to that juncture, but Tipperary claimed the plaudits by beating Galway to advance to a semi-final in what was fast becoming a year to savour on every front from the county.

It's worth recalling that at this juncture, that between 1977 and 2011 Dublin had not beaten Kerry in championship action but 2016 offered up another knock out instalment of a rivalry to match any.

“It's worth recalling that at this juncture, that between 1977 and 2011 Dublin had not beaten Kerry in championship action...”

The game suitably lived up to its billing with Kerry paying scant regard to the Dubs' recent dominance of the fixture.

Indeed when they struck for two goals before the interval to allow them to go in six up, the capacity crowd was entitled to wonder was a first possible defeat since August 2014 on the cards for the Dubs.

Not for the first time in recent seasons they answered unequivocally.

Without scoring a goal - itself a rarity - the Dubs chipped away with late points from Diarmuid Connolly and Eoghan O'Gara crowning another result to savour for those on Hill 16.

On the opposite side Tipperary gave Mayo plenty to ponder but despite a bright start and an impressive revival Mayo were quite simply too street smart and a goal from Conor O'Shea powered them to another final date with Dublin, a re-match of the 2013 final and a chance to end the oft-mentioned All-Ireland drought.

We weren't to know it at the time but for the first time ever the football championship would extend into the month of October and that was because a replay was required for the first time since 2000.

In a bizarre first instalment Mayo set about their task with vigour. Indeed had it not been for two incredulous first half own goals an unusually toothless Dublin could have found themselves adrift.

On a damp day for football it was nip and tuck during the second period before a squandered Dublin sideline ball allowed Mayo one last upfield foray, which was expertly converted by Cillian O'Connor from distance to force a draw and a replay.

On a drier day the replay was no less competitive.

Dublin surged into an early lead thanks in no small part to Dean Rock before a goal of the season contender from Lee Keegan shook the game.

A rough and tumble encounter saw both Jonny Cooper and Lee Keegan leave the field after black cards.

Once again a controversial goal provided a pivot as Diarmuid Connolly converted a penalty following a Rob Hennelly foul on Paddy Andrews.

Mayo refused to let go and a late, late free under the Hogan Stand provided O'Connor once again with a difficult chance to level matters late on but the fairytale credits had been used up in the first outing and Dublin held on.

This was Dublin's third one point final win under Jim Gavin underlining a remarkable achievement and admirable resolve.

They have left their mark on this decade like no other team to date.
